Lobby Group Seeks to Find Wire Seizure Justification

Hearings Are Adjourned Pending Committee's Legal Study.

FCC 'Cooperation' Admitted by Prall

Arguments on Injunction Against Inquiry Set for Wednesday.

By Felix Bruner.

The Senate Lobby Investigating Committee, headed by Senator Hugo L. Black (Democrat), Alabama, adjourned its hearing yesterday to consider how it could legally justify its action in seizing and examining the private telegraphic correspondence of a thousand American citizens and business concerns.

Resentment grew as such noted lawyers as Silas Strawn, of Chicago, and John W. Davis, of New York, and such businessmen as John J. Raskob and the du Ponts learned that without their knowledge the committee had seized and examined thousands of telegrams, many of a highly confidential nature, passing between them and their clients and business associates.

In a systematic movement, the committee has pried into the personal messages of most of the leading opponents of the New Deal. The committee acted in the guise of attempting to learn of lobbying activities, but their examination of messages was not confined to those concerning alleged lobbying. It was all-inclusive.

Subpenaed Superintendent.

Typical of the committee's practice was a subpena served on T. B. Kingsbury, superintendent of the Western Union Telegraph Co., in Washington, requiring him to produce all messages of every character charged to the law firm of Winston, Strawn & Shaw, of Chicago, between February 1, 1935, and December 1, 1935. Ralph M. Shaw, a partner in the firm, is head of the American Liberty League in Chicago. Strawn is prominent in the Republican Party.

The committee received the "cooperation" of the Federal Communications Commission which is authorized by law to examine the records of the communication companies. In the Washington Western Union office alone employes of the Communications Commission copied 13,000 messages. Thus messages were obtained without even the fromality of a subpena. Some estimates placed the number of telegrams examined in behalf of the committee as high as 5,000,000.

Chairman Anning S. Prall of the Communications Commission said that he did not know whether his employes had copied telegrams for the Black committee. He said the work would have come under the direction of Irvin Stewart, vice chairman in charge of the telegraphic division.

Stewart refused to discuss the situation and said he would neither affirm or deny that messages had been copied for the committee. Prall said that Stewart had "co-operated" with the Black committee.

The law gives the commission access at all times to "all accounts, records and memoranda, including all documents, papers and correspondence" of communications companies.

Protest against the action of the Senate committee was voiced in the House by Representative Wadsworth (Republican), New York, who said he had been informed that "tens of thousands of telegrams" had been seized by employes of the Communications Comission and turned over to the Black committee.

"It strikes me," he said, "that we have reached a strange stage in the development of democracy when private correspondence can be seized without court procedure or a search warrant."

Wadsworth said he did not propose to construe the powers of the Senate committee, but that the reported seizure went beyond the exercise of power to a point where a Government commission "deliberately searched and seized private correspondence of citizens."

"I am not exaggerating when I say that a state of federalization is going on and has reached a point

Light For The Homes Of China

After centuries of backwardness and darkness, Sian, China, will surrender its candles and oil lamps for the benefits of modern civilization. A huge power plant is being erected to give the city electric lighting.

Apparently Washingtonians don't like darkness either. They like to shop for rooms, apartments and homes in the daylight. Here's a home that was rented the other morning through a Post Want Ad:

Judge Demands 'Crack Down' in Auto Violations

McMahon, Hearing Witness, Also Urges Stiffer Penalties by Courts.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Washington's relentless warfare on law-flouting automobile drivers gained a new ally yesterday when Police Court Judge John P. McMahon, assailing street safety conditions, urged another "crack-down" program—this time in local courts—by increasing penalties for traffic law infractions.

Testifying before the special House traffic sub-committee, Judge McMahon scored inconsistent laws governing major traffic offences and declared:

"Conditions and facts are crying to high Heaven for more severe penalties."

Then he said he favored boosting the penalty for reckless driving from a maximum of $100 or 30 days in jail to $500 or six months in jail, as proposed in a bill now before Congress.

Judge McMahon said he felt radical increases in traffic violation penalties and additional police would remedy Washington's traffic problem.

McMahon Assails Prettyman.

Pausing a few moments later, Judge McMahon grasped an opportunity to flay crowded court conditions and at the same time attack previous testimony of Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman.

At an earlier hearing, Prettyman condemned current court procedure, describing his police court office as a "madhouse because of the present system."

To this, Judge McMahon declared: "It is the lack of any system at all which creates a 'madhouse' in the corporation counsel's office. We are crowded—yes. But it's not court procedure which causes confusion."

He then cited instances where scores of accused motorists are summoned to the corporation counsel's office all at the same time—9:30 a. m.

"Everyone rushes into the office to see one of Mr. Prettyman's assistants. They either want their charges dropped, changed or lessened. This is what brings confusion and 'madhouse' conditions. There is one room in Mr. Prettyman's Police Court office which is not even being used, yet it is available."

Urges Stagger System.

To remedy this, Judge McMahon recommended a stagger system of cases. Each police precinct, he said, should be alloted separate hours to present their cases in court.

Both Judge McMahon and Judge Gus A. Schuldt, who also testified, condemned a proposed system of magistrate courts. They agreed that such a system would only tend to increase disorder and confusion in handling routine cases.

To show inconsistency in penalties, Judge McMahon pointed out that a hit-and-run driver may run

Wanderlust Puts 'Georgia Kids' On Ice Until Arrival at Capital

Trio Stows Away in Refrigerator Car at Augusta; Failure to Apply Air Pressure Saves Youths From Death on Way Here.

That will o' the wisp, wanderlust, represented by three youths from Georgia, came to Washington yesterday, packed in cold storage, and it wasn't until the boys were hustled off to the Union Station Restaurant for some "thawing-out" coffee that they learned how close they came to death.

They came here in a refrigerator car in which they stowed away in the balmy city of Augusta, Ga. The car was unlocked, and it is a good thing this wasn't discovered in the Eckington freight yards, where the boys were picked up, or this story would be about tragic, inevitable, freezing death, instead of the genial spirit of the highways which led the trio away from home.

The Georgia Kids.

"We're the Georgia Kids," the youths told police at the Twelfth Precinct.

They were registered as Walter Hancock, jr., 18; Joe Kitchem, 17, and John William Seales, 19.

Had some trainman discovered the icy car was unlocked, and put on the air pressure, they'd all have died, for air pressure seals the cars tight.

The boys were treated at the Twelfth Precinct, and Detective Sergt. Arthur Fihelly called the sheriff in Augusta to see about sending them back home.

"Their folks are about broke," the sheriff said, adding that the city's juvenile board also is broke.

So last night the young adventurers were turned over to the Board of Public Welfare, which will return them S...h.

Hoped for Jobs.

"You're sending us home, eh?" asked Hancock. "Well, if we've got to, we've got to go.

"But there's nothing to do down there, and we thought we might get jobs or places in a CCC camp in the North."

When Walter, Joe and John arrived here they had between them a can of salmon and a loaf of bread. They had kept warm in the refrigerator car by huddling close together.

When Fihelly asked them what they'd have done if the door had been locked, they grinned.

"We'd have eaten that salmon and bread before we passed out," they laughed.

2 Drown, 600 Flee Iowa Flood Waters

Missouri Valley, Iowa, March 4 (AP).—Ice gorged rivers, swollen by torrents of spring thaw-water, spread tonight over wide areas of southwestern Iowa and eastern Nebraska.

Relief authorities counted two youths drowned in southern Iowa, numbered refugees here alone at 600, and estimated that many lowland dwelling families had been driven from their homes.

The Boyer River and Willow Creek overflowed into Missouri Valley early today, forcing city authorities to call on CCC enrollees for rescue work.

More than 50 blocks of residence area were inundated this afternoon. The city's gas supply was cut off by the flood and the electricity plant was threatened.

'Fight It Out In Street,' Lift Strike Slogan

All-Night Parley at City Hall May End Service Workers' Walkout.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 4.—With strike leaders threatening to "fight it out in the streets," building owners tonight prepared for an all-night peace parley with service union spokesmen.

First indication of an impending settlement of the strike of elevator operators and other employes which threatened to spread its terrorism throughout the country came from union headquarters.

"It may be reached tonight," said James J. Bambrick, local head of the Building Service Employes Union.

Bambrick, emerging from the conference at City Hall at dinner time, said he was "willing to be locked up in these offices all night if it will lead to a settlement, as well it may."

All-Night Session Hinted.

Hints that an all-night session was in prospect came also from Mayor LaGuardia and Edward F. McGrady, Federal labor mediator, who was sitting in as an observer.

Bambrick's threat to "fight it out in the streets" brought a demand from District Attorney William C. Dodge that he explain what he meant.

Subpenas were served on the union requiring Bambrick and George Scalise, vice president of the international organization, to present themselves at the prosecutor's office tomorrow for questioning.

In a new outbreak of violence, 50 strike sympathizers set on a youth found working in an upper East Side building. The victim, Leopold Litman, 22, suffered shoulder injuries. His assailants escaped.

Other developments:

1. In addition to raising the threat of a country-wide strike of elevator operators, porters, heating engineers and other service unions, strike leaders claimed they could precipitate a general walkout of all organized labor in the city.

Strike Out of Control.

2. Approximately 1,200 strike sympathizers, by police estimate, got out of control when officers tried to break up a demonstration in front of union headquarters late today. They were too busy eluding police, however, to cause any serious damage.

3. Slugging and vandalism continued in other sporadic outbreaks, following a night of riotous demonstrations in the Park Avenue sector. Stench bombs were brought into play.

4. McGrady stood ready to act as mediator as Mayor LaGuardia strove for a settlement.

5. Real estate operators rejected an offer of State mediation, but both sides expressed willingness to accept McGrady's services.

6. Impromptu Tenants Defense League demanded a grand jury investigation of violent disorders. Other tenants joined the strikers' picket lines.

7. Seventy-two more buildings lost their service crews, bringing the total of strike-bound struc-

2 Detained in Plot to Sell Stolen U. S. Naval Secrets

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, March 4.—Suspected theft of valuable United States Naval secrets and their sale to a foreign power was disclosed here today as the subject of a Federal investigation.

United States District Attorney Peirson M. Hall said the evidence has been submitted to the State and Navy Departments at Washington. Instructions from there are awaited.

William James Turntine, Long Beach youth, arrested in Sweetwater, Tex., was brought here by Department of Justice agents and held as a Government witness.

His former roommate in Long Beach, Harry Thomas Thompson, is held in the county jail as a Government prisoner, on a charge of illegally wearing the uniform of the Navy.

The Los Angeles Evening Herald and Express said the case involved theft of secret orders relating to the 1934 annual maneuvers of the fleet. The orders disclosed movements of various units 90 days in advance, together with information on recently developed aircraft equipment. They were reported to have been stolen by a man masquerading in a Navy uniform.

The newspaper quoted Federal Attorney Hall as saying information is in the hands of Department of Justice operatives, "conclusively indicating that valuable secrets of the United States Navy have been sold to a foreign power."

The paper reported Turntine to be a witness before the grand jury and holding "key information" in the case.

A third man reported in on the reputed espionage plot was said to have dodged a Department of Justice dragnet and sailed several weeks ago on a steamer bound across the Pacific.

A Justice Department spokesman here yesterday said that Harry Thomas Thompson is being held by Federal officers in Los Angeles on a charge of impersonating an enlisted man in the Navy.

The department said no other charges were now pending against Thompson. Asked whether espionage was involved in a grand jury investigation there, officials would only say, "It's impossible to predict what the department will do before the grand jury."

England Discloses New Sabotage Plots

London (Thursday), March 5 (AP).—Two additional cases of suspected sabotage aboard British naval vessels, bringing the total to eight in six weeks, were revealed by the admiralty early today.

The latest cases were reported aboard the battleship Repulse at Portsmouth and the submarine H-28 at Portland.

The admiralty said sabotage has not yet been proved, but it was admitted both vessels were damaged.

It is recalled that King Edward VIII, when Prince of Wales, made a trip to South America and South Africa aboard the Repulse in 1925.

Health, Police Fund Slashes Are Up Today

Mrs. Norton Asks District Committee Members to Aid in Battle.

Fight on Federal Grant Barred by Anxiety Over Elections.

By James D. Secrest.

Amendments to restore some of the funds slashed off Budget Bureau estimates for the District Health Department, hospitals and Police Department will be offered on the floor of the House today when the District supply bill is read.

Members of the House District Committee were urged by Chairman Mary T. Norton at the regular committee meeting yesterday to assist in a fight for more adequate appropriations to safeguard Washingtonians against disease and crime.

Just what amendments will be offered and who will submit them could not be learned last night, although Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, said he would make a fight for more policemen.

As the House prepared to act upon the $42,573,283 appropriations bill, however, it appeared that no member dared or was willing to move for a restoration of the $3,000,000 cut in the United States lump-sum payment despite the threat of a $2,000,000 deficit in District finances.

Cite Coming Elections.

Members questioned adroitly evaded the issue and explained "off the record" that they could not afford to sponsor such an amendment during an election year when their constituents might misunderstand their motives in taking $3,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Two days of general debate on the District bill were concluded yesterday without a word being said in defense of the Washington taxpayers or, for that matter, on the bill before the House.

Communism, on a national scale, was the foremost topic on which members talked at length. With all time controlled by the Blanton-Ditter combination, the greater part of the afternoon was consumed by attacks on communism. Only toward the end of the day were such members as Representatives Maverick (Democrat), Texas, and Marcantonio (Republican), New York, allowed to decry what they termed reactionary efforts to link every defense of free speech with communism.

The McCormack disaffection bill was the major topic of debate with its author, Representative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts, defending it and Maverick and Marcantonio assailing the measure as a threat against constitutional rights of free speech.

Mexicans Debated.

During Maverick's speech Representative Blanton asked his Texas colleague whether there are not 90,000 Mexicans in Maverick's San Antonio district and whether they did not lean to communism.

"Yes, I've got 90,000 Mexicans in my district," Maverick shouted," and they're just as good citizens as you are."

He then protested that he considered Blanton's question as "unfair" and intended to embarass him.

While McCormack was speaking Blanton interrupted to charge that "right here in the District is a Communist school that won't even let policemen enter." The reference was to testimony before the District sub-committee.

Blanton also demanded that correspondents for the Daily Worker be "kicked out" of the press gallery because the newspaper, he said, is definitely linked with the Communist Party of Soviet Russia. The Texan has frequently attacked the Daily Worker on the House floor.

Seymour Waldman and Marguerite Young are the correspondents of the Daily Worker.

Attention of the House was called by Blanton to the address of Earl Browder, secretary of the Communist Party in the United States, over the Columbia Broadcasting System last night.

"He is next to the most important Communist in the United States," said Blanton. "We have some important ones here too."

Starts Reading Today.

The clerk of the House will begin reading the bill for amendment today promptly at 3:30 p. m. under a unanimous consent agreement obtained by Blanton before adjournment yesterday.

Unless other business interferes, the time prior to that will be devoted to continuation of general debate. However, there is no indication it will be devoted to any subjects nearer to the bill at hand than those discussed yesterday, among which were the tariff on butter, neutrality and the methods used by the Senate lobby committee to obtain copies of telegrams.

Convinced that the Blanton-Ditter machine will probably override all liberalizing amendments to the bill today, District officials were planning appeals to the Senate subcommittee on District appropriations.

While the Senators were disinclined to comment on the House sub-committee's drastic reductions until the measure reaches the Senate, Senator Royal S. Copeland (Democrat), of New York, stated he would do "everything honorably possible" to restore the funds for continuation of character education in the public schools.

New Revenue Sources Sought as Corporate Tax Protest Spreads

President's Basis for Taxing Corporate Profits Challenged

Experts Question Estimate $4,500,000,000 Will Be Withheld From Stockholders in 1936; Point to U. S. Figures in 1933 Income.

The accuracy of one of the basic points of President Roosevelt's tax message, his statement that Treasury estimates show that over $4,500,000,000 of corporation income will be withheld from stockholders in 1936, was seriously challenged yesterday by persons familiar with corporate earnings.

The estimate was held to be far too high.

Treasury officials, questioned on the basis of the estimate, refused to state the grounds on which they had arrived at the colossal sum, but said the figure would probably be explained before the House Ways and Means tax sub-committee "at the proper time."

They likewise withheld estimated total corporate income figures for 1936 upon which the $4,500,000,000 figure, representing probable undistributed corporate earnings for the year, had been based.

An apparent disparity even on this figure was noted when it was reliably reported that the figure presented to the House tax sub-committee was actually $4,800,000,000.

Treasury experts contended that a great deal of work had been done in preparing for the President the estimates of total corporate income for 1936 and of that portion which usually would be withheld. They held that these estimates would not be more than "a few per cent off."

However, analysis of figures for past years appeared to show that to justify the figure of $4,500,000,000, the 1936 total corporation income would have to approach such staggering totals as seven to eight billion dollars.

The last figures available are for 1933. The grand total net income of all corporations for that year was $2,985,972,000. That was a depression year, however, and the figure is somewhat lower than for succeeding years, since corporation income was one of the quickest recovery indices in responding to better conditions.

On the taxable base of $2,985,972,-

Demand for Exemptions of Levy on Undivided Profits Growing.

Principle 'Sound,' Borah Declares

Hill Says Entire Field of Possible Revenue Will Be Explored.

By Robert C. Albright.

A special House sub-committee yesterday called on the Treasury for additional estimates touching new revenue sources, as demands for substantial exemptions from the President's proposed corporate earnings taxes gathered force on Capitol Hill.

"We want to see the whole picture," said Representative Samuel B. Hill, of Washington, directing the sub-committee study of ways and means to find $792,000,000 annually in new revenues for the next three years, and $620,000,000 thereafter.

Hill disclosed that the entire subject of undistributed corporate profit taxation was explored yesterday with Treasury experts, that a graduated tax ranging from 20 to 37 or 40 per cent was discussed, and that a 90 per cent "windfall" tax on some $217,000,000 of refunded or unpaid processing taxes was proposed by the Treasury.

The sub-committee chairman declined to reveal what new tax proposals the Treasury has on file, but they are said to run the gamut of studies made of manifold petty taxes, upward revision of the individual income tax structure, and several forms of the manufacturers' excise tax. Also included, it was learned, was a proposal to eliminate exemptions on surtax incomes, and to lower exemptions on taxable estates.

Liberalization Sought.

Failure of Treasury experts to propose any exemptions from the corporation earning tax, such as might enable corporations to build up a lightly taxed surplus against future emergencies, other than the ordinary statutory depletion exemptions, led to a wide range of proposals to liberalize the President's recommendations in this respect.

The rift over revolutionary economic and political aspects of the sweeping tax plan grew wider, as analysis of the Administration's recommendations brought some praise and much criticism from Republicans and Democrats on both sides of the Capitol.

In the Senate, from Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, announced liberal candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, came a guarded statement of approval.

Calls Principle Sound.

"There is a sound principle, in my opinion, in the President's tax proposal," said Borah. "Like all taxes, it may be carried to the point where it will be destructive. But within proper safeguards, I am prepared to consider the proposition with entire sympathy as to its soundness."

The Idahoan advocated in addition, however, creation of a Federal agency to eliminate "extravagance and waste," and urged renewal of attempts to collect war debts so "another fund" could be distributed to stockholders.

But another Republican, House Minority Leader Bertrand H. Snell, said the President's recommendations spelled the "official end of the breathing spell for business," and declared it wrote a new chapter in "the brain trust's subversive warfare upon the Supreme Court."

Snell said the President proposes "an economic policy which would confiscate for boondoggling the vital working reserves of every industry in the United States."

"They are reckless, ill-considered and appear to combine political desperation and economic folly," Snell added.

Hastings Critical.

Senator Daniel O. Hastings, outspoken Delaware Republican, charged the President's plan is a "deliberate effort to destroy the strong corporations."

"His proposal revolutionizes the income tax of corporations and seriously affects many individuals, both of small means and large means," Hastings said.

"It assumes what we have been told so often, that the New Deal has found a remedy for depressions, and America will see them no more."

He remarked that Mr. Roosevelt had tossed the tax bill to Congress "as casually as he would toss out a ball at a baseball game."

"The President's program is con-

Council Urges Revival of NRA Labor Features

Child Work and Hours Are Among Functions Listed By Berry Board.

A program for the revival of the NRA so far as it affected Government control of wages, hours and fair trade practices has been formulated by the council formed by Maj. George L. Berry, co-ordinator for industrial co-operation. The council will meet March 12 for consideration of the program.

Texts of reports of five of the council's committees have been sent to members for preliminary consideration. One of the proposals is for creation of a commission or commissions to "determine wage rates to be paid by each of several industries."

The commission also would have authority to prohibit child labor and to regulate minimum ages at which employment shall be legal.

Trade Practice Rules.

The committee on fair trade practices urged legislation to enforce compliance with rules of fair trade practices where a substantial majority of an industry has agreed on such rules and they have been approved by the Federal Trade Commission.

The proposals look toward legislation at the next session of Congress. They were discussed at a recent White House conference, attended by Berry and Secretaries Roper and Perkins. Among other measures, the council gave support to the Wheeler-Rayburn bill broadening the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, a bill which has met almost unanimous opposition of business.

Other recommendations called for amendment of the antitrust laws to allow affirmative co-operative action, transfer of judicial functions of the Federal Trade Commission to a separate body, and liberalization of RFC loans to small businesses, making wage and hour stipulations with the loans.

Proposed Authorities.

Proposed authorities of the commission to govern wages and hours would be:

1. After findings, have authority to determine a minimum wage rate to be paid by each of the several industries.

2. After findings, have authority to determine maximum number of hours per week to be worked in each of the several industries.

3. After findings, have authority in any instance where the hours per week have been greater than the hours of work per week established by the commission for

NewDealRaked InBreckinridge NominationBid

Roosevelt Policies Called 'Folly' in Opening Talk at Baltimore.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A Staff Correspondent.

Baltimore, March 4.—Opening his fight for the Democratic Presidential nomination on the anniversary of the day that President Roosevelt assumed office, Henry Breckinridge, former Assistant Secretary of War, tonight shelled the New Deal with a raking fire.

Speaking before a dinner of the Association for Defense of the Constitution, formed by prominent Marylanders to oppose President Roosevelt, Breckenridge assailed the New Dealers as "political adventurers who have obtained control of the machinery of the Democratic Party and used it to violate the Constitution and every living principle for which the Democratic Party has stood in its history."

He challenged the contention that the New Deal had promoted economic recovery, asserting that the Wallace-Tugwell "economy of scarcity" had "directly destroyed" between 2,500,000 and 3,100,000 jobs in this country.

He argued that "the best economic plan that bureaucracy could plan was the economy of scarcity," and he added that "it is highly probably that the economic folly of government during the last three years is directly responsible for a third, and perhaps a half, of existing unemployment."

Assails Tax Proposals.

Turning from his prepared address, Mr. Breckenridge, best known as the attorney for Charles Lindbergh, severely criticized President Roosevelt's proposal for taxes to force the distribution of all corporate earnings.

He maintained that the proposal "violated every economic principle of statesmanship from the time Joseph was adviser to Pharoah down to the present day," adding that it was "destructive of prudence" in corporate management.

He said if he were a Communist he could think of no better way to undermine the capitalistic structure of the United States than to destroy the safeguards which prudent management undertook to set up against evil days. What would have happened to many large corporations —and to their employes—during this depression, Mr. Breckinridge asked, if surplus funds had not been built up in good years?

Mr. Breckenridge spoke to a fashionable and enthusiastic audience of almost 1,000, chiefly Democrats. They were not Democratic office holders—only two were

Veteran Sues for Wooden Leg Held for $25 Bill by Landlady

Every three years the Government issues William C. LaSalle a new wooden leg. It takes about that long for a wooden leg to wear out.

The Government issued LaSalle a new leg last July. But he never had a chance to use it.

LaSalle went to Mount Alto Hospital about the time he got it. He stayed there for several months, under observation. LaSalle was in the Army during the World War. Tuberculosis of the bone set in his leg and the doctors cut it off.

When he got out of the hospital, LaSalle went to his rooming house on Ascott place northeast to get his leg. But his landlady, Mrs. Elizabeth Hill, who now lives at 4022 Thirty-fourth street, Mount Rainier, said she was keeping it until LaSalle settled a $25 bill she claimed he owed.

But LaSalle didn't have $25. Furthermore he had to have that new leg. The old one was in pretty bad shape.

Last night LaSalle appeared in the magistrate court at Mount Rainier and asked Judge G. H. Hughes to give him a writ of replevin for the leg. Mrs. Hill was there to see that she got $25 first. Attorneys represented both.

Judge Hughes set March 25 as the date for the hearing.

Senators Argue New Deal 'Aid' On Anniversary

Administration, 3 Yrs. Old, Finds Upper Chamber Split on Benefits.

The third anniversary of the New Deal was made the occasion yesterday for a barrage of political comment.

Republicans shouted that the Administration was heading the country toward ruin through spending, borrowing and taxing, and pointed to growing unemployment.

Democrats insisted that the country, generally, is prosperous and compared conditions with those existing in 1932 and the early months of 1933.

In the Senate, Dickinson (Republican), Iowa, and Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, engaged in a lively debate. The Republican National Committee issued a pamphlet scoring President Roosevelt as a "bureaucrat." Senator Borah (Republican), Idaho, in a statement, criticized New Deal spending Senator Barkley (Democrat), Kentucky, told a radio audience that the President was "the author of the people's salvation and their security."

Recovery Ahead, Says Roper.

Secretary Roper used the occasion to declare that the country is "well on the road to complete business recovery."

President Roosevelt himself observed the day by receiving the usual number of callers and otherwise conducting his business as usual.

White-haired Senator Dickinson, a Republican Presidential possibility, told the Senate that "$15,000,000,000 have been squandered in three years years in waste of reckless extravagance."

"Meanwhile, prosperity remains elusively 'around the corner,' and in the same old 'dreary street' which so aroused Candidate Roosevelt's scorn in 1932," he said. "But promises cannot restart the wheels of industry, nor is human nature gullible forever."

Robinson replied that the "very men who appealed to the Administration to save their businesses are now most clamorous against the Government extending some aid to others."

Robinson was frequently interrupted by Dickinson. "I wonder what the Senator from Iowa knows about Democratic and Jeffersonian principles," he said. "Never before in his life, did he show any sympathy for Democratic principles."

Robinson said that Dickinson had proposed no substitute for New Deal measures.

"The country, as a whole, is now prosperous," Robinson declared. "Many businesses are boasting of their prosperity. The Senator implies that we should have been as slow in acting as was the Hoover Administration.

"Action" Is Praised.

"One of the things of which I am proudest is the promptness with which new measures have been devised and put into effect. It was the Hoover do-nothing policy that brought this country into conditions that existed before the Roosevelt Administration."

Robinson repeated that prosperity had returned.

"What kind of prosperity?" Dickinson asked.

In the course of the debate, Robinson referred to Dickinson as his first choice for the Republican nomination and to Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, as his second choice.

"The mess you fellows made of things is the real issue," Dickinson shouted.

Hoover Pay Boost Asked.

By the Associated Press.

Senator Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, introduced today a measure to increase the salary of J. Edgar Hoover, head of the Justice Deparent's "G-Men," to $10,000 a year. Hooover now draws $9,000.

discovered among the diners—nor were they Democrats engaged in politics.

But in the group were some of the most prominent lawyers, physicians and businessmen in Baltimore. George Weems Williams, unsuccessful Democratic candidate for Mayor of Baltimore in 1919, was the toastmaster.

Barton Opens Meeting.

The meeting was opened by Randolph Barton, jr., an outstanding Democratic lawyer. William L. Rawls, former Democratic school board president and city solicitor of Baltimore, was present. On the list of subscribers taking tables were Stuart S. Janney, law partner of the late Albert C. Ritchie; Mrs. W. C. Bruce, wife of the former Democratic Senator from Maryland, and Dr. Raymond Pearl, internationally famous Johns Hopkins scientist.

Although the audience for the most part was made up of wealthy persons, most of them in the past have been contributors to the Democratic cause in this State. On the other hand, there was a sprinkling of such outstanding Republicans as Blanchard Randall, his party's mayoralty candidate last year; Webster Smith, candidate in 1934 for the Republican gubernatorial nomination, and Robert Garrett, whose forbears helped found the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

Originally it had been planned that Mr. Breckinridge should share the speaking program with Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State at the end of the Wilson Administration, but the latter was prevented by illness from attending.

Outlines 16-Point Platform.

Breckenridge, whose candidacy for the Democratic Presidential nomination in the coming Maryland primary has been announced by the Association for Defense of the Constitution, outlined a 16-point platform in his address tonight. His platform was as follows:

"1. The re-establishment of the orderly processes of American constitutional life.

"2. The uncompromising support of the Supreme Court of the United States as the impartial arbiter of the rights of citizens.

"3. The maintenance of the integrity of the Federal system.

"4. The suppression of lawlessness, whether in the offices of the Government or elsewhere.

"5. The encouragement of the States to exercise their powers in behalf of social justice.

"6. The employment of the adequate powers of the Federal Government under the Constitution to suppress unfair trade practices in interstate commerce.

"7. The exercise of the constitutional powers of States and Nation to further the legitimate interests of agriculture.

"8. The ending of the economy of scarcity which has destroyed export markets, subsidized the sales by foreign farmers of farm products that should have been grown and sold by American farmers, taxed the consumers to pay for the destruction of the staples of life, diminished employment and shoved the forgotten man into the bread line by the regiment.

"9. The exercise of every constitutional power of State and Nation for the promotion of just and generous relations between all workers in industry.

"10. Provision for the unemployed.

"11. The reduction of unemployment by breaking the stranglehold of destructive governmental policy on the economic life of the Nation.

"12. Economy in government.

"13. The maintenance of a sound currency and the financial honor of the Federal Government.

"14. Suppression of the silver racket which has caused the demonetization of silver in the silver currency countries, dislocated the economic life of China and enriched silver speculators of the world with the money of the American people.

"15. The re-establishment and extension of the civil service principle and the mustering out of Farley's mercenary political army.

"16. The faithful performance of the repudiated and unfulfilled "covenants" of the National Democratic

In commencing his address Breckinridge made a stanch defense of such Democrats who have assailed the New Deal as Al Smith, John W. Davis, Lewis Douglas, James P. Warburg, former Gov. Joseph B. Ely and Maine's former Chief Justice Pattangall. These men have been assailed by New Dealers as reactionary and traitorous to Democratic principles.

Breckinridge recalled that it was in Baltimore in 1932 that President Roosevelt gave the first indication of his attitude toward the Supreme Court when he pointed out it was controlled by Republicans. He maintained that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court should be upheld whatever the cost.

Politics and People

Black Lobby Committee Agents Assume Functions of Political Secret Police.

By Franklyn Waltman

INTELLIGENT people have been prone to smile when critics of the New Deal have warned that we were heading toward dictatorship and that our liberties were being abridged and dissipated. When Al Smith concluded his American Liberty League address with the exclamation that a choice now had to be made between Moscow and Washington—between the American and the red flags—many thought a good speech had been weakened by a Fourth of July peroration more worthy of an alderman than the keen, realistic Smith.

Even all this talk about restrictions on freedom of the press has left most practitioners of the journalistic art cold. It was all so ridiculous, thought men who were otherwise just as critical of the New Deal as anyone. Take a look around, they said, and it could be seen by all who did not blind themselves that we had all our liberties—did not the New Deal critics daily express without fear their views in the newspapers and nightly on the radio? Time enough to worry, most of us thought, when a secret political police, an OGPU or Cheka, started to work.

Well, without getting unduly excited about it—for the facts have become public—the time to worry has arrived. For some months a secret police has been at work, under the direction of Senator Hugo L. Black, the Alabama Democrat, snooping into the private papers and affairs of men who have been critical of the New Deal.

Senator Black's OGPU, under the pretense of investigating Congressional lobbying, have seized the contents of private telegrams wherever sent, about whatever matter, by members of the American Liberty League. Indeed, the report is that some 13,000 telegrams have been scrutinized by the secret agents since last summer. How many more, none knows. Their activities come to light only by inquiring at your telegraph office.

The suspicion is strong that Senator Black is more concerned about prying into the affairs of leading critics of the New Deal than he is in running to ground improper lobbying. But even if he were inspired solely by a desire to reveal the activities of lobbyists, he is in this instance using methods more suitable to the Soviet people's commissar for home affairs—"everybody's home," as they say in Russia—than to an American official sworn to uphold the Constitution.

The much venerated Bill of Rights of the Constitution—which even those New Dealers most bitter in their hostility to recent Supreme Court decisions assert they would not touch—declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated."

Commissar Black and his lobbying committee have no more right to go on fishing expeditions, seizing the private papers even of lobbyists, than police officers have to club confessions out of persons suspected of crime or judges have in forcing an indicted person to give testimony against himself.

If Commissar Black may seize telegrams sent by persons, even though they are lobbyists—and in the present instance there is evidence that telegrams of persons with no relation with lobbying activities have been seized—why should he not have postal inspectors steam open their daily mail to learn what they are doing? Why should he not assign some of his secret agents to tap their telephone wires and why should he not send these agents into their homes and offices at night to see what they can find?

One thing leads to another and if the activities of Senator Black's agents receive general approval, it will be but a few months before the mail of persons suspected of lobbying or opposing the New Deal will be under surveillance. Indeed a political reign of terror, resembling the activities of the Nazis and the Soviets, is not a far-fetched idea.

The belief is spreading among many persons that the New Deal is not above punishing its enemies. The tax bill of last summer was generally interpreted as a punitive measure against the wealthy. Public utility operators and many of their shareholders contend that the utility holding company bill was designed for their particular punishment. Tax assessments and suits suddenly are pressed against Liberty Leaguers on the eve of their recent dinner. Now comes evidence that the personal affairs of New Deal critics are being scrutinized.

In view of that and in view of the sentiment which seems abroad in the land—even though it springs from a persecution complex—will not many men feel it the part of wisdom to hold their tongues and seemingly acquiesce in the activities of the estbalished power at Washington? And is this not the most effective way to suppress freedom of speech?

But, assert the defenders of Commissar Black, there is no intention of divulging the contents of purely private communications. If a communication has nothing to do with lobbying, it will be held confidential and forgotten; nothing will be done to embarrass or harass the man inocent of lobbying activities, it is asserted.

But after what happened on Capitol Hill within the last week, one cannot be so sure. It will be remembered that Democratic Leader Joe Robinson, in the thick of the debate on the case of the outed Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, asserted that he was not the only Army officer engaging in politics. Challenged to name the officer he had in mind, Senator Robinson said he referred to Maj. Gen. F. C. Bolles, another Army Corps commander.

It was all very mystifying until several days later former Senator Arthur Robinson, of Indiana, revealed that Gen. Bolles, his old Army commander in France, having seen a reference in a magazine that the Indianan was a Republican Presidential nominee, had written to him a word of congratulation and asserted he was rooting for the Senator from Indiana.

This letter, it seems, was misaddressed to Washington and landed on the desk of Joe Robinson, where it was inadvertently opened and read and subsequently forwarded to the Indianan, with a note from Joe Robinson, explaining the inadvertence. That same day Joe Robinson proclaimed to all the world that Gen. Bolles was engaging in politics. The incident requires no comment.

Kansas G. O. P. Pledges Party To Aid Landon

State Convention Hails Governor as Best-Fitted for Presidential Race.

By the Associated Press.

Wichita, Kans., March 4.—Kansas Republicanism threw its full weight today behind Gov. Alf M. Landon for the party's Presidential nomination, pledging him the State's 18 delegates to the Cleveland convention.

In a State convention that sidetracked everything except the "Landon boom," Republicans joined with their State committee in offering the Kansas Governor as the "best-fitted" candidate.

New Mexico Republicans on Monday endorsed Landon while choosing six uninstructed delegates, and two delegates have been pledged to Landon in Oklahoma's incompleted slate.

The Kansas convention elected Senator Arthur Capper, Henry J. Allen, former Senator and Governor; William Allen White, Emporia editor, and Mrs. E. C. Little, of Lake of the Forest, as delegates at large.

Instructed for Landon.

It instructed them to vote for Gov. Landon for the Presidential nomination "until he is nominated or until he releases them." District conventions previously had chosen 14 delegates, giving them similar instructions.

Gov. Landon was not present.

A crowd of approximately 2,500, including 1,196 delegates, cheered at every mention of his name.

The resolution endorsing Gov. Landon, adopted by a rousing chorus of "ayes," read, in part:

"We feel justifiable pride in the attention which his common-sense administration of the affairs of Kansas has evoked in other States. We believe that he is the one man, above all others, who is best fitted for the position of standard bearer of the Republican Party in the next campaign, and we offer his name to Republicans of the Nation, not only as the leader who will make the best candidate, but as one who, when he is entrusted with the affairs of the National Government, can be depended upon to give the country a sound and sane Administration."

Roosevelt Leads, 5 to 1.

Donaldsonville, Ga., March 4 (AP). Democratic voters of Seminole County in rural southwest Georgia today voted more than 5 to 1 for the renomination of President Roosevelt over Gov. Eugene Talmadge in the Nation's first Presidential primary test.

The complete official tabulation announced by G. B. Garwood, election official, gave the vote in the preference primary, which is not binding, as 661 for Mr. Roosevelt and 120 for Talmadge, his outspoken critic.

When the results were announced tonight, somebody tied down the fire whistle and automobiles raced through the streets with horns blowing.

"It's an old-time election celebration," said Charles Reynolds, clerk of the superior court. "The town is full of farmers and everybody is having a good time. This was a great day for Seminole County."

News of the trend brought expressions of surprise in political circles in Atlanta, in view of the fact that only yesterday another county, Pierce, had called off a Presidential primary.

"I hadn't heard about it," said Gov. Talmadge in Atlanta. "I doubt if the Talmadge folks had much chance to get out and vote."

Marion Allen, Georgia campaign manager for Mr. Roosevelt, hailed the Seminole result "as evidence of what the voters throughout the State would do" if a State-wide primary is called.

Rails to Fight To Keep Extra Freight Rates

Class 1 Roads Ask I. C. C. Continue $104,500,000 Added Revenue.

By the Associated Press.

Class 1 railroads yesterday arrayed legal and executive experts before the Interstate Commerce Commission in an effort to continue indefinitely emergency freight charges estimated to yield $104,500,000 annually.

Faced with a commission order requiring a reduction in passenger fares, the rail spokesman argued that additional revenue provided by the freight surcharges is needed to meet increased costs of operation and strengthen their credit structure.

On the other hand, coal producers and other shippers have mapped a fight against extension of the charges, which are scheduled to expire July 1.

Hearing to Continue.

The hearing probably will continue more than a week.

Opening the railroads' plea for extension, R. F. Vletcher, counsel for the Association of American Railroads, said that Class 1 roads failed to earn their fixed charges during 1935 by $287,539.

With the possibility of an outlay totaling $65,000,000 for the Government's rail pension and social security programs during 1936, he continued, "the railroads can see no escape" from continuing the surcharges.

C. E. Penney, president of the Erie Railroad, described the extension as "very necessary" and added:

"The situation with respect to the financial standing of the carriers cannot be met by further substantial economies."

If increased earnings "make the dollars available," he asserted, railroads will increase expenditures for maintenance this year.

Dr. Julius H. Parmelee, director of the A. A. R. railway economics bureau, testified that even a continuance of the charges would fail by $155,000,000 annually to meet increased costs of operation.

He added, however, that the charges would aid in meeting heavier costs "at a time when the railroads need all the reveues they can get."

French to Confer Here On Atlantic Air Service

By the Associated Press.

A French air mission will confer here tomorrow with American officials looking toward establishment of a transatlantic air line between the United States and Europe.

Plans already have been made by British and German companies to begin experimental flights this year over two possible routes—via Newfoundland and Ireland and via the Azrose—to link his country with Europe in regular commercial service.

where the telegraph companies are afraid to resist the commission's clerks," he said.

Meanwhile, the Black committee employed Clampton Harris, Birmingham (Ala.) lawyer, to represent it in the suit brought by Strawn to enjoin the Western Union from giving the committee telegrams sent by his law firm. While the committee is not a party to the suit, it nevertheless plans to be represented.

Hearing Postponed.

Justice Jesse Adkins, of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, already has issued a temporary restraining order. By agreement of the attorneys, hearing on the question of a permanent injunction, originally set for today, was postponed until next Wednesday. At that time the authority of the committee will be questioned in court and evidence of its activities produced.

"Repeatedly it has been held that the Senate can call for what it pleases," Senator Black said. He predicted that the injunction would not be made permanent.

"There appears to have been a concerted effort by those who seek to influence legislation behind the scenes, through subterranean channels, to prevent us from getting evidence," he continued.

"We have already seen that the Associated Gas & Electric Co. and the Cities Service Co. have failed to produce evidence we wanted.

"Similar Disappearances."

"I don't know how many telegrams, letters and memorandums we have subpenaed. I have found a striking similarity in the disappearance of papers. We have discovered many written evidences of activities to influence legislation outside the companies involved. I suppose I have talked with every department of the Government that has to do with communications about our task.

"In many instances responses to our questionnaires have stated that certain evidence was missing, but we found it in other places."

Liberty League members and other New Deal opponents are busy checking with the telegraph companies to find whether their messages have been seized. John W. Hamilton, counsel for the Republican National Committee said the committee would endeaver to learn whether its messages had been seized or copied.

"If Snator Black has been reading our telegrams," he said, "he won't find anything very complimentary to him."

Issues 1,000 Subpenas.

In addition to the telegrams copied through the "co-operation" of the Communications Commission, the committee has issued about 1,000 subpenas asking for messages. The subpenas go to the telegraph companies, not to the persons sending the telegrams. The senders are not even notified, except in some instances, by the wire companies. The Western Union about a month ago instructed its managers to inform senders that their messages were being seized by the committee.

The Strawn suit is based on the section of the Constitution prohibiting unwarranted search and seizure, and guaranteeing citizens privacy of their property and papers.

"We object," Strawn said, "to having our private affairs and the affairs of our clients subjected to such an unreasonable and unconstitutional search and seizure. In the practice of our profession we are necessarily entrusted with information by our clients which is purely of a private nature and which should not be subjected to public scrutiny.

"One of the highest duties imposed upon an attorney is to treat communications between himself and his clients as confidential. From the earliest time the law has treated such communications as privileged and has forbidden an attorney from divulging them without the consent of his client. A lawyer who did otherwise would be derelict in his duty.

"In the present case the subpena does not specify a single telegram. It asks for every telegraphic communication sent out or received by the firm for the period of almost a year. It makes no mention of any subject to which the telegrams must relate. To use the words of the Supreme Court in condemning a subpena of similar character, it is simply a 'fishing expedition.'"

Strawn's petition quotes the law which prohibits telegraph companies from divulging information contained in messages.

"The contents of said telegrams are not the property of said telegraph company, but the property of the plaintiffs," the petition states. "Said telegrams and the contents thereof are papers and effects of the plaintiffs within the purview of the fourth amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Energy Forms Solid Matter, Einstein Says

Gravitation and Electricity Combine, 11,000-Word Article Holds.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, March 4.—Gravitation and electricity combine to form solid matter, Prof. Albert Einstein said tonight in an 11,000-word article designed to put "reality" into the mysteries of the science of physics.

"Free invention" of explanations of these mysteries, he held, is the only logical system leading to the long sought truths.

His explanation of the origin of matter is a development of his theory of electrical bridges between shells of space, announced about a year ago.

Prof. Einstein's article tonight is the speech he was expected to make last May, when he was a "bad boy" and told the Franklin Institute he had nothing to say on the occasion of presentation of a gold medal by the institute.

Einstein's speech had been widely advertised, a distinguished audience sat waiting to hear it, with no intimation he was unprepared, until the moment for him to speak.

It was announced his speech would be written later and published as an "article" in the proceedings of the journal of the institute. The 11,000-word article is the result—its subject "Physics and Reality."

Einstein traces man's attempts to solve the riddle of matter and gravitation since the Greeks. He says that by observation of realities, coupled with daring imagination, physicists will find logical solutions.

Quantum Mechanics.

As one example he sketches the troubles raised by quantum mechanics, the most brilliant of recent physical discoveries. Quantum mechanics show, and experiments have proven, that energy is not continuous, but somehow made of particles.

But, Einstein says, no one has shown how the steps between these particles of energy are made—for example, when a hot iron cools, its heat is given off in particles, or steps, and no one knows what happens between these steps.

He cites the Schrodinger mathematics as explaining that these steps actually do occur, by statistics which hide any idea of what the individual steps may be.

Einstein then proposes his explanation. He uses the relativity theory to account for the theory of corpuscles of matter, which he originally announced with Rosen, of Princeton.

The mathematical solutions, he says, show physical space as consisting of two identical shells connected by a bridge. This bridge is a corpuscle, a material particle, something made of electricity and gravitation.

Dr. Landis Gets Medal.

Detroit, Mich., March 4 (AP).—Dr. Eugene Markley Landis, 32-year-old Philadelphia physician who performed the delicate feat of measuring changes in the minute blood vessels under the fingernails, was tonight awarded the John Phillips Memorial Medal of the American College of Physicians.

Contributions of Dr. Landis, who is assistant professor of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, to scientific medicine were described as "numerous and important" by Dr. James Miller, of New York, president of the college, in making the award.

Soluble Bullet Claimed To End Fowl Poisoning

Minneapolis, March 4 (AP).—Two University of Minnesota scientists today announced they had evolved a new soluble bullet, designed to end lead poisoning in ducks and other waterfowl.

The poisoning results from the birds eating lead shot which has accumulated on the bottoms of lakes and ponds. Dr. R. G. Green and Prof. Ralph Dowdell said the lead absorbed in that manner by ducks frequently caused a paralysis which is fatal in from two weeks to three months. The new shot is made from lead-magnesium alloy. It disintegrates in water or inside the fowl within 48 hours.

Warsaw College Closed After Anti-Jewish Riots

Warsaw, March 4 (AP).—Warsaw University, scene of anti-Semitic riots in which girl students participated, was closed today for an indefinite period. The girls joined the rioters and one of their number was injured. Jewish leaders estimated those suffering injuries at about 30.

Nationalist students used firecrackers and stench bombs in several classrooms.

Keaton Fined as Speeder.

Los Angeles, March 4 (AP).—Buster Keaton, film comedian, paid a $50 fine today for speeding.

H. B. Johnson, State highway patrolman, said the actor was going 70 miles an hour. Keaton explained he was in a hurry to get downtown where he was scheduled to be a witness in a court case.

Capital Enjoys Warmest Day In 4 Months; Mercury at 74

Topcoats Are Discarded, Waterfront Crowded as Capital Welcomes Sun; Today to Be Fair and Colder With Temperature in 40's.

Fanned by gentle springlike zephyrs and bathed by the friendly sun, Washington yesterday experienced its warmest day in almost four months.

Fog, which hung over the city early in the morning, vanished, and the mercury climbed to a maximum of 74 degrees at 3:50 p. m., its highest peak since November 5, 1935, when an unseasonable heat wave brought a reading of 79.

Today will be fair and considerably colder the Weather Bureau predicted last night. The temperature will be in the 40s, the forecaster said, and sharp March winds may be expected.

The weather, which seemed to bring a promise of good things to come, found Washingtonians ready to appreciate it.

During the lunch hour Government workers and those who toiled elsewhere in the city went to the favorite restaurants and cafes without the benefit of their topcoats.

The water-front took on the atmosphere of spring as rapidly as possible. Here and there along the wharves groups of men and boys cast their lines into the tawny water.

Late yesterday afternoon thousands of motorists drove at a leisurely gait around the Speedway and out to Hains Point.

Flower vendors appeared up and down the avenues and boulevards, pushing their carts to the somnolent cadence of spring.

New Tube Is Held Boon to Television

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

New York, March 4.—A new amplifier tube of hitherto unheard-of power, which soon may make commercial television possible on a national scale, was demonstrated tonight before the Institute of Radio Engineers.

It is the discovery of Philo Taylor Farnsworth, youthful San Francisco and Philadelphia television inventor. He is confident the tube, which he calls the "multipactor," will have far-reaching influence on the radio industry and will be of special significance in speeding television to the millions.

The tube is capable of current amplifications heretofore impossible, Farnsworth says the tube is capable of producing a million electrons from one, in less than one-millionth of a second. If allowed to continue unchecked for a full second, he said, the tube would produce and release electrons equivalent to a greater current than that consumed by all the electrical apparatus in the world.

The inventor said the tube is of great advantage in television transmission because of the phenomenal speed of its response and higher efficiency in amplification.

Only Woman Skipper On Great Lakes Dies

Port Huron, Mich., March 4 (AP).—Mrs. Sophia Maud Buckley, 76, credited by sea faring associates with having been the only woman to captain a three-masted schooner on the Great Lakes, is dead here.

Capt. W. J. Small, of Port Huron, one of the Coast Guardsmen who rescued the crew of her ship when it grounded south of Harbor Beach 45 years ago, recalled today that the woman skipper had insisted on being the last to leave the vessel.

Before she retired nine years ago, Mrs. Buckley was head cook for the Canadian Steamship Co. fleet. She died in a hospital here.

Alonzo, Film Actor, Is Stabbed by Extra

Hollywood, March 4 (AP).—Chito Alonzo, film actor and brother of Gilbert Roland, leading man of the screen, was stabbed in the abodmen with an ice-pick today by an unidentified extra player. His condition is not serious.

Alonzo had gone to the aid of John Ebberts, assisting casting director at the Pioneer Pictures' studio, who was attacked by the extra, claiming he had not been given a film assignment. Police began a search for the extra.

Reserve Bank's Governor Retired

Richmond, Va., March 4 (AP).—Directors of the Fifth Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond announced today that under a ruling of the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, George J. Seay, for nearly 22 years governor of the Richmond bank, has been retired.

Seay had been appointed president of the bank for a five-year term at a meeting of the directors February 13, but the directors were advised by the board of governors of a new ruling which would prohibit the appointment because he had passed the age limit.

The governors, under the Federal reserve act, as amended by the banking act of 1935, ruled that they would not approve the appointment of any one as president or first vice president who is 70 years or more of age, or who before the end of his five-year term will have reached that age.

Sparrows at Mission Face Eviction Again

San Juan Capistrano, Calif., March 4 (AP).—An army of sparrows occupied the eaves of historic San Juan Capistrano Mission today. Thus began an ancient struggle that always ends the same way—with the sparrows moving out.

On March 19, a superior number of swallows, returning from winter feeding grounds in Mexico and South America, will appear. There will be a short conflict, and the sparrows will be evicted.

The sparrows begin to occupy the eaves the first week of March. The return of the swallows never varies from March 19.

Records have been kept on the battle of the birds for 68 years, the Rev. A. J. Hutchinson, mission pastor, said. The score is 68 to 0 in favor of the swallows.

With the same clock-like regularity, the swallows annually evacuate their position on October 23.

Los Angeles, March 4 (AP).—Amelita Galli-Curci, opera singer, and her husband, Homer Samuels, concert pianist, were sued for $54,570 today as the result of an automobile accident. Mrs. Thomas Kienster, young wife of a city fireman, alleged she suffered concussion of the brain when her automobile and one driven by Samuels collided last week in Hollywood.

Espionage Evidence Accuses Him of Prying Into American Secrets.

By the Associated Press.

London, March 4.—A middle-aged German lawyer-writer, accused of espionage upon Great Britain's air force, heard documents read in Old Bailey Court today tending to implicate him in spying against American air forces during the World War.

The trial, Great Britain's first one for espionage since the war, saw the defendant, Dr. Hermann Gortz, blink when he heard his own description of himself as a "dangerous intelligence officer" turned against him.

The crown presented a document Gortz had written to the German government describing his intelligence work during the World War and mentioning that he lived for a year and a half in the Unted States and three and a half years in London.

In Touch With Aviators.

During that period, the letter said, he was "again in contact with American and English war-time aviators" and "I am even now still in touch with military aviators on the active list, or I probably can get in touch with them again."

The crown said Gort applied in 1935 to the German air ministry for a job as a spy, but was refused.

One document quoted Gortz as saying of his World War service: "On two American Air Force officers who were shot down was found a warning referring to me as a particularly dangerous intelligence officer and containing an exact personal description of me."

The statement said while Gortz was in New York and Chicago in 1925 and 1926 he met American Air Force officers whom he had questioned during the war and was introduced to aviation clubs and war veterans' organizations. He was forced to leave America, it was said, because he refused to become a citizen.

"I am successful in my methods of interrogation in which I use the drawing-room tone," the document said. "There is hardly an aviator whom I am not able to persuade to make more or less important statements."

Aided by Young Woman.

Gortz was aided in espionage activities at British airfields, the prosecution charges, by an attractive young woman who fled the country.

Lieut. Col. William E. Cook, a general staff officer and director of intelligence for military operations, said during the World War Gortz was selected by the German government to learn details of the organization of United States air forces on one front.

Gortz, who speaks excellent English, pleaded not guilty to the charges.

Sportsman Says Wife Overestimated Fortune.

Los Angeles, March 4 (AP).—Morrison Morrison, socially prominent sportsman, said today his wife's estimate of his fortune missed the mark by $9,998,300. Answering her divorce suit, Morrison said that instead of being worth $10,000,000, he had only $1,700, and was unemployed.

Asserting Mrs. Morrison is worth $4,000,000 in her own right, Morrison requested she be made to pay $25,000 as fees for his attorneys.

Reserve Board Will Discharge 6 Bank Heads

Regional Chairmen Will Be Dismissed to Avoid Dual Executives.

By the Associated Press.

In a drastic shakeup, the Federal Reserve Board announced last night that it would terminate the services of six regional bank chairmen, effective April 30.

An accompanying statement said the action was in line with procedure intended to avoid "dual executive responsibility" at the 12 Federal Reserve banks, and to place the chairmanship upon a "purely honorary basis."

The banks also have presidents. Chairmen who will be dropped are F. H. Curtiss, Boston; J. H. Cafe, New York; R. L. Austin, Philadelphia; E. M. Stevens, Chicago; J. S. Wood, St. Louis, and C. C. Walsh, Dallas.

Three present chairmen were designated to continue until December 31. They are E. S. Burke, jr., Cleveland; H. W. Martin, Atlanta, and W. B. Gerry, Minneapolis.

J. J. Thomas, Kansas City, previously had been reappointed for the remainder of the year. There are vacancies at Richmond and San Francisco.

(The 12 Federal Reserve Banks are headed by chairmen and presidents. The chairmen, who also serve as Federal Reserve agents, are appointed by the Reserve Board here. The presidents are chosen by directors of individual banks, who in turn represent commercial banks in various districts. Under the 1935 banking act, the presidents are subject to confirmation by the Reserve Board, which exercised this veto power for the first time last week by rejecting G. W. Norris as president of the Philadelphia bank. The reason given for the rejection was his age—71.)

The board's brief statement, which did not explain why only six of the present chairmen are to be dropped, said the new procedure would result in a "more efficient organization" and that "substantial economies" in the operation of the system would be accomplished.

It added that since under the plan of "honorary" chairmanships such officials would only be required to devote a "limited portion" of their time to the banks, it would be possible to "obtain the services of men who are not only well qualified but public spirited to serve as chairmen."

Officials of the board declined to elaborate on the formal statement. Yesterday's action emphasized, however, the extent to which the new board appointed only recently by President Roosevelt, under the 1935 law, is revamping the Federal Reserve machinery.

The present chairmen were reappointed for only two-month terms last ecember 31 by the old Federal Reserve Board in order that the new board, which took office February 1, might designate its own appointees.

Compensation for the chairmen, who are the official representatives of the board at the regional banks, is fixed by the board, but is paid by the banks. The salaries vary in the 12 regions.

The chairmen make regular reports to the board, and preside over meetings of regional bank directors. Under the new procedure, many of their duties will be taken over by the bank presidents, who hold full-time jobs.

$100,000 Drive For Symphony To Open Today

Plan for 10-Day Campaign to Be Told Workers at Luncheon at Carlton.

The National Symphony Orchestra's campaign to raise $100,000 to sustain a symphony season next year opens today at a luncheon in the Carlton Hotel for campaign chairmen, their assisting leaders and volunteers.

Plans completed last night by Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe and Harold N. Marsh, chairmen of the general committee, will be announced in send-off talks to the workers, and final instructions for the ten-day drive will be outlined.

The luncheon will be the first of a daily series at which committee members and other workers will report on the campaign's progress.

In addition to reaching the goal, workers hope to increase the number of memberships in the orchestra association, it was pointed out at campaign headquarters yesterday. At present there are 700 members (those who last year contributed $25 or more). However, there are 1,700 persons who contributed varying amounts to the sustaining fund for the last year.

A membership in the association not only assists the symphony in a material way, but offers the donor privileges. Members have the first choice of season tickets.

Campaign leaders expected at the opening luncheon today are:

Mrs. Malin Craig and Brig. Gen. Perry L. Miles, chairmen of the Army committee; Mrs. Reeve Lewis, Mrs. Eugene Byrnes, Charles Pimper, in charge of contacts with civic and social organizations; Mrs. Oliver Strunk and Harold Brooks, chairmen of the business group; Mrs. Henry Wallace and Alvin W. Hall, of the Government committee; Mrs. G. J. Rowcliff and William Floyd Crosby, metropolitan committee chairmen; Mrs. Nicholas Longworth and John D. Kennedy, chairmen of the national committee; Mrs. Emory Scott Land and Rear Admiral Adolphus Andrews of the Navy and Marine Corps; L. E. Rubel, supervisor of publicity activities, and Mrs. Edwin B. Parker, chairman of the suburban committee.

Success of Symphony Drive Is Important to Grade Pupils

Going to symphony concerts in Washington is not entertainment for grownups only. Boys and girls attend the symphony, too. And they like it.

Ever since the National Symphony Orchestra, which today opens a $100,000 campaign for funds to sustain another season of concerts, was organized under Hans Kindler's leadership five years ago, the youngsters have had their own programs. In addition to the regular Sunday and midweek concerts in Constitution Hall, the symphony each season has played a students' series. Dr. Kindler and his men have taken to the schools the good music which teachers of music appreciation have long talked about in class.

Each year the young audiences for these students' concerts have grown, and this year the orchestra played for the school children, not in a centrally located hall, but was been going to three widely separated high school auditoriums.

And the concerts aren't just a means of getting out of school—they begin at 3:30 p. m., just after school closes for the afternoon.

"Our boys and girls look ahead to the symphony concerts for at least two weeks," said Miss F. C. Mortimer, principal of Wheatley Public School, who heads a party of 80 grade pupils at each concert in Eastern High School, "we get the programs ahead of time, and explain the music that's to be played. The boys and girls get all keyed up when concert day comes, because they know the music they're going to hear.

"And you have never heard such interesting conversation as takes place when the children come back to school. They will say, 'Wasn't the Pizzicato Polka swell,' or 'I was certainly glad when the orchestra played the Toreador Song.' Then sometimes they criticize playing they didn't like."

While the students' concerts are now an integral part of the orchestra's season, directors of the association say they must raise the full $100.000 during this campaign if the school series is to be continued next year.

Pupils Strike as Chief Is Ousted From School.

Alameda, Calif., March 4 (AP).—All of Alameda High School's 2,000 students stayed away from classes today and leaders said they would not return until School Superintendent William C. Paden is reinstated.

Paden, superintendent for 11 years, was ousted by a reorganized board of education.

A LIGHT SMOKE

OF RICH, RIPE-BODIED TOBACCO

All kinds of people choose Luckies, each for reasons of his own. But everyone agrees that Luckies are A Light Smoke of rich, ripe-bodied tobacco. It is a rather surprising fact that the leaves of the same tobacco plant may vary far more than the leaves from plants of quite different types. Chemical analysis shows that the top leaves contain excess alkalies which tend to give a harsh, alkaline taste. The bottom leaves tend to acidity in the smoke. It is only the center leaves which approach in nature the most palatable, acid-alkaline balance. In Lucky Strike Cigarettes, the center leaves are used.

Luckies are less acid

Recent chemical tests show* that other popular brands have an excess of acidity over Lucky Strike of from 53% to 100%.

'Frantics' Put On New Yearly Musical Revue

A Long Cast Does Well By Many Sketches, Satires and Skits at Wardman.

"WHO'S LOONEY NOW?" The Chevy Chase Frantics present the satirical comedy, with music, in two acts and seven episodes, with six entr'actes, directed by Isabelle Farrington. Book by Mrs. Farrington, with music and lyrics by McCall Lanham, Mary Lehman and Sammie Ives. Scenery designed and constructed by Jean McConnell; costumes by Marie Blaikie and Amana Ann Myers. Dances staged by Edith West. At the Wardman Park Theater. Reviewed Wednesday evening by W. A. Whitney.

With a large cast performing in 13 sketches and incidental specialties, the Chevy Chase Frantics last evening presented their twelfth annual show, "Who's Looney Now?" before a near-capacity audience, which applauded to the echo the efforts, separately and collectively, of the performers.

As with the other recent editions, "Who's Looney Now?" is a satirical resume of the events of the past twelve-month, with sharp darts by Isabelle Farrington aimed at the great and near-great of Washington and all the "isms" on the calendar.

At times sarcastic, more frequently brilliant, the play was consistently interesting, offering a sort of homemade version of what Ben Hecht and Charles MacArthur succeeded in translating to the screen in their devastating "Soak the Rich."

Many Major Topics.

In the staging of the program, seven major topics came under the eagle eye of the author—the political scene, with particular reference to November, 1936; boondoggling, the vogue of amateur hours, agricultural relief and the AAA, the international scene, the Supreme Court and Congress, plus a number of entr'actes not entirely unrelated to the main sketches in thought and presentation.

For the most part, the students of the Farrington School—that is, the Frantics—read the lines with vigor, danced passably and succeeded in presenting a thoroughly enjoyable performance.

Among those participating in the evening's hilarity were Betty Berly, Betty Kelley, Helen Woodruff, Elizabeth Woodbury, Marion Titus, Mary Lou Ellicott, Jane Preston, Marjorie Dickens, Marion Chappell, Mary Goshorn, Sammie Ives, Marian Davis, Helen Sawyer, Betsy Hollingsworth, Virginia Catlett, Betty Zinsmeister, Mary Carey, Neysa Mather, Adele Johnson, Peggy Ann Pinckney, Betty Williams, Lucy Ann Peters, Mary Holmes, Margaret McWeeney, Eleanor Painter, Rita Sanford, Lucy Webb Hayes, Mary Jane Brown, Dorothy Park, Pauline Voorhies, Clara Margaret Gille, Jane Marshall, Mary Alice Hayes, Elizabeth Hungate, Marjorie Kerr, Jerry Bear, Janice Curran, Mildred Elliott, Beverly Huse, Jean McConnell, Betty Bates, Sue Campbell, Marcia Hinrichs, Daly Murray and Jeanne Smith.

Featured Player

MAXINE MITCHELL, a member of the Montgomery Players, will give an interpretation of the stage and screen play, "The Valiant," assisted at the piano by Mrs. Dorothy Radde Emery, of Takoma Park, Friday night at Takoma-Silver Spring High School. The program also will include short skits entitled "Love From Different Parts of the Earth," "Lasca," "City Streets," "Songs My Mother Sang," and "Just Kids."

Authors' Chief Describes Poor Pay in Radio

Duffy Bill, He Declares, Will Cut Compensation to Lower Scale.

Out of more than one billion dollars in business done by the radio stations of the United States and their allied industries, 45,000 composers and authors last year received only $2,680,406.46, charged E. Claude Mills, manager of the ASCAP (shortened name of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers), yesterday in a hearing before the House Patents Committee.

Mills appeared in opposition to the Duffy bill, passed by the Senate and now being studied by the committee.

He added:

"Without music, the radio is almost inarticulate."

He made the point in order to prove his contention that even under the present copyright law, the act of 1909, the creative artists of the country are "grossly underpaid," while under the Duffy bill they would receive even less for writing the Nation's music. He pointed out at considerable length the necessity of music in operating radio stations.

Mills' Statement.

Mills said:

"In 1934 the moving picture theaters of the country, according to tax returns, sold to the public $1,560,000,000 worth of tickets. You can't operate movie theaters without music. It may come in a can instead of in the orchestra-pit, but it's there. Remember, those theaters wrote no music. None of those managers wrote that music that aided them in securing those huge returns. None of the movie producers wrote any of that music. They created nothing.

"And yet, out of that colossal sum, they paid a total to all composers and authors in the world of 1 cent out of every $47!"

Much of Mills' time before the committee was consumed in a discussion of the Duffy bill's proposal that the artists of this country join the Berne convention, which is the International Copyright Union, and under which international copyright exchange and protection would be automatic. This section is said to have the particular approval of the State Department.

This section was opposed by Mills on the ground that "it is a lovely theory, and may some day, when we reach an international millenium be possible to work out, but at this time, it is directly and absolutely impractical."

Conditions In Germany.

He continued:

"What are the international conditions today? In Germany, for instance, the Hitler government makes it absolutely impossible for the citizens of the United States, unless of the favored Aryan class, to protect their copyright rights in German courts.

"The Nuremberg law holds per se that in any court action in which Aryans are opposed to non-Aryans, the non-Aryan is wrong. How, therefore, could Irving Berlin recover for infringements of his copyrights in that country? How would it benefit us to join the Berne convention there?

"Or Italy. This country also has been one of the largest consumers of American works. However, Mussolini has made a mandate that only Italian works shall be performed there."

He protested during the hearings at the uniform royalty rate of two cents per phonograph record insisted on by the Duffy bill. This means, he said that "the top composers, for the grandest symphonic works that great genius can create, costing them years of grinding toil, receive exactly the same rate as is received by the composer of 'Flat Tire Papa, Momma's Goin' To Give You Air.'"

Appearing at the hearings today as "guest star" will be George M. Cohan, famous Broadway figure, it was announced.

Gardeners to Meet.

The District of Columbia branch of the National Association of Gardeners will meet at F. W. Bolgiano's establishment, 411 New York avenue northeast, tomorrow at 7 p. m.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Joint recital by Jose Echaniz, pianist, and Marta de la Torre, violinist, in Willard Hotel ballroom Wednesday night. Program: For piano—Prelude, Fugue and Variation (Franck-Bauer), Toccata in A (Paradisi), Ballade in A flat (Chopin), Cipressi (Castelnuovo-Tedesco), Golliwogg's Cake-Walk (Debussy), Three Preludes (Shostakovich), Danse Russe (Stravinski), Fete Dieu a Seville (Albeniz), Danza Cubana (Lecuona), Ritual Fire Dance (De Falla); For violin —Poema de una Sanluquena (Turina), Gavotte (Bach-Kreisler), Impromptu (Lecuona), Madrigal (Lecuona), Jota De Falla), Rapsodia Cubana (Marta de la Torre). Alfred Yurdin, accompanist.

Not having heard Jose Echaniz for at least a decade, when he was touring as assisting artist with Tito Schipa, I was delighted to find how brilliantly he has developed in virtuosity. He is the same sensitive musician as before, but with an added breadth of style and a positive assurance in interpretation. His range of dynamics has increased in both directions, from delicacies to thunders; indeed, he is at present a little overweighty in his fortissimi, but that excess is easily remediable.

Admirably artistic in his readings, Echaniz shows an instinct for the characteristics of composers and distinguishes between them with nicety. This trait was obvious in his treatment of Franck, Paradisi and Chopin in the opening group. His sense of poetic volues is keen and manifests itself in his fine toal shadings, while his playing is thoroughly intelligent in the minutiae of phrasing and clear exposition.

The novelties on his program were welcome. Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's "Cipressi" is a charming piece of impressionism, a little indebted to Debussy for harmonic devices, but nevertheless original in conception. The three preludes by from his Opus 34, recently published, bear the unmistakable stamp of the young Russian composer's personality. All three are short, and all impudent and challenging, as though the intent were caricature. They are technically difficult, virtually etudes for skilled fingers, and interesting in their ideas.

Marta de la Torre has technique and temperament, a winning combination in a violinist. She plays with dash and emphatic accents and her readings have a glow. In the matter of intonation, I would like to believe that either she or her instrument was temporarily out of sorts. Not only were there uncertainties of pitch appearing disconcertingly now and then, but the tone wos occasionally rough.

Receiving its American premiere, Joaquin Turina's "Poema de una Sanluquena" made a favorable impression. The titles of the four movements indicate a programmatic intention which, at a first hearing, draws attention away from the music itself. If one disregards the "story" and listens for ideas, one finds them to be of the impressionistic order. The suite is well constructed, full of poetic images and intriguing in its harmonic subtleties.

Hiring of Rival Union Members Bring Walkout

Harrisburg, Ill., March 4 (AP).—A general labor "holiday" and the shutdown of all business activity here were called for tomorrow by two leaders of the Progressive Miners of America at a mass meeting tonight.

Protesting the reopening of Peabody Mine No. 43 with "imported" men from the rival union, the United Mine Workers, the officials urged all members of the Progressive Miners' organization to join in a concerted countywide walkout. About 3,600 men and 9 mines are affected.

Senate Defeats Electrification Bill Alterations

Norris Leads Fight to Pass Bill for 420 Million; Passage Due Today.

By the Associated Press.

Backed by a wall of Administration support, Senator Norris (Republican), Nebraska, yesterday beat back attempts to pin new restrictions on his $420,000,000 rural electrifictaion bill and hoped to put it through the Senate today.

While Administration leaders predicted the path of the bill would be reasonably smooth, it ran into bitter opposition from several Senators. A biting attack was delivered by Senators Connally (Democrat), Texas, and O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, against certain of its discretionary spending provisions.

By agreement with President Roosevelt and departmental executives, Norris introduced an amendment to trim the bill from its original 10-year $1,000,000,000 authorization to $420,000,000.

The amendment went over until today to be matched against one by Senator King (Democrat), Utah, who proposed to cut the sum to $100,000,000.

Saves Discretionary Provision.

Norris salvaged by a margin of four votes a provision to leave discretion with the electrification administrator as to how much should be spent annually for supplies, personal services, automobiles, office equipment and other items.

An amendment by Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, to put the administrator on a plane with regular departmental executives who must present their needs to Congress was beaten 41 to 37. Norris insisted his bill followed the pattern laid out by other New Deal enactments.

Although a number of amendments were added, the general purpose of the bill remained the same—to lend money to rural communities, farm co-operatives and to farmers for generating and distributing plants and electrical equipment, thus financing delivery of power where none is available from private sources.

Under the amendment worked out at a White House conference, $50,000,000 a year for two years would be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to start the program. In the following eight years a direct appropriation of $40,000,000 annually would be authorized. Previously the bill had proposed $100,000,000 a year for ten years.

King Repayment Plan Accepted.

The Senate accepted an amendment by King to reduce from 40 to 25 years the time allowed for repayment of loans for generating and distributing systems.

Connally shouted his objections when Norris proposed to eliminate the $5,000,000 annual limitation on expenditures for investigations and studies in connection with administration of the bill by allowing the administrator to spend "such sums as shall be necessary." This amendment carried, although Connally voiced his opposition "to this policy of blanket authorizations."

While King introduced his major amendment as a general substitute for the Norris bill, Administration leaders predicted it would be defeated promptly and that the Norris measure, cut to $420,000,000, would be passed and sent to the House.

Northern Neck Fishers Prepare for Shad Run

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Heathsville, Va., March 4.—Northern Neck trap fishermen are busily preparing for the annual run of shad and herring in the Chesapeake Bay, Potomac and Rappahannock rivers and their tributaries. Boats are being overhauled, nets and equipment mended and crews taken on. The driving of stakes has started, and some of the nets will be overboard by the end of the month.

Northumberland and Lancaster are the leading fishery counties in the Northern Neck of Virginia, and hundreds of men are employed in the industry.

President Pushes Button, Generating Power

8 Gates Closed, Work Finished On Norris Dam

President Sets Off Siren Marking Official Completion of Job.

By the Associated Press.

Norris, Tenn., March 4.—To the screaming of a siren set off by President Roosevelt on the third anniversary of his inauguration, potential kilowatts began piling up today behind TVA's Norris Dam, fourth largest dam in the world.

Thousands watched as eight sluice gates slipped into place and the impounding of the water of Clinch River started.

The siren, sounded for two minutes, signalized official completion of the $36,000,000 dam, the first constructed by the TVA in its development of the Tennessee River system.

Power-generating equipment is yet to be installed, but it is expected to be ready for operation about August 1. It will have a 132,000-horsepower capacity.

As he pressed a key at the White House to sound the siren, President Roosevelt said "Norris Dam is a practical symbol of better life and greater opportunity for millions of citizens of our country.

"The Nation has come to realize," he continued, "that national resources must not be wasted and the Norris Dam is evidence that our program for conservation of these resources is going forward."

Norris is one of a unit of navigation, flood control, national defense and hydro-electric developments of which Wilson Dam, built at Muscle Shoals during the World War, was the first. At present Wilson is the TVA's only source of electric power.

Upon its creation by Congress soon after President Roosevelt took office, the Authority assumed control of Wilson Dam. Norris was started October 3, 1933, and completed far ahead of the original schedule. Four other dams, Guntersville, Pickwick Landing, Joe Wheeler and Chickamauga have been started by the TVA.

From a flag-covered platform resplendent under a warm spring sun, speakers hailed completion of the massive barrier a few hundred yards upstream as signalizing a new day in the Tennessee Valley and as of significance to the rest of the country.

"Not only does this dam belong to you, but the rivers which it controls, and all the rivers of the Nation belong to the people," David E. Lilienthal, TVA power director, told the throng gathered about the platform a few hundred yards below the dam.

Heart Throbs

Of Minnows Normal After Oregon Is Shifted.

"Two hearts beat in three-quarters time" in George Washington University Medical School yesterday, after one of them had been transplanted into the embryo of a sea minnow, but unfortunately the visitor, was out of step.

Professor George B. Jenkins at the Clinic, demonstrated that it was possible to transfer the heart from the embryo of one minnow into that of another, without affecting either the heart that was transferred, or the minnow to which it was inducted.

"The hearts slow down a little at first," said Professor Jenkins, "but after an hour they usually resume their normal speed."

This experiment is very important, for it is the first time such a transfer has been made successfully, and although the professor has started far down in the animal kigndom, he hopes to work up to where this same work can be performed on humans.

Surgeons who attended the experiment at the George Washington Clinic said that they believed it opened wide fields of medical possibilities.

An application form which must be filled out for those seeking aid under the needy blind act was made public yesterday by the Board of Public Welfare.

In letters addressed to persons seeking relief under the act Elwood Street, welfare director, advised the public assistance division of the board be supplied with proof of blindness in the form of a written statement from a licensed occulist, proof of residence in the form of letters from "reputable" citizens of the District attesting to length of residence, proof of age in the form of birth or marrige certificate or similar document and proof of citizenship in the form of naturalization papers for persons born outside the United States.

In filling out the form the applicant will be required to state his financial resources and income, amount and source of pension or compensation, if any.

1,500 Back Bill To Curb Chain Store Discounts

Independents Told Measure Will Come to Vote in Three Weeks.

A group of 1,500 independent merchants "marched" on Washington yesterday to urge passage of the Robinson-Patman bill to limit discounts on quantity purchases. The measure is aimed at chain stores.

The merchants heard Senator Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, tell them the bill would come up for action in about three weeks. The measure is one of approximately 20 similar bills aimed at the large chains.

Senators Borah (Republican) Idaho, and Van Nuys (Democrat), Indiana, introduced a new measure yesterday intended to outlaw price discriminations and providing a $5,000 fine for violators.

Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, told the group he hoped his bill to enable States to pass legislation to permit manufacturers and retailers to fix minimum retail prices would be passed at this session.

Representative Boileau (Republican), Wisconsin, told the gathering the fight against chain stores was similar to the one against utility holding companies.

Robinson said the principal purposes of his bill was to prevent monopoly.

During the day many of the merchants visited the Capitol and discussed legislation with members of Congress. They will meet again today and a delegation will call at the White House.

Meanwhile, the National Association of Manufacturers found "distortion, ambiguity and vagueness" in the Wheeler-Rayburn Federal Trade Commission bill and urged against its enactment because it is "one of the most enormous and unprecedented extensions of power which has ever been embodied in proposed legislation." The bill would extend the commission's investigation powers.

The association said the commission "would be given power to investigate facts without reference to alleged or possible violation of the act, but purely on a fact-finding basis, so that it may recommend legislation in its own discretion and according to its own pleasure at any time for any purpose."

The statement was filed with the Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee.

Tydings Speaks Before Grocer, Druggist Rally

Senator Talks on Trade Practices to Parley of 1,500 Here.

Chain-store competition "threatens the extinction" of small business houses, Senator Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, told 1,500 delegates yesterday at a convention here of the National Retail Grocers Associatoin and the National Retail Druggists Associatoin.

He explained to the gathering in favor eleminationofthechainstor the Mayflower Hotel he did not favor elimination of the chain store, but would like to curb any of its practices which constituted unfair competition.

Senator Joseph T. Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, and Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), Texas, assailed the chain-store custom of attracting trade with leaders, articles sold below cost.

They told of their efforts to win Congressional passage of the Robinson-Patman bill, which would prohibit manufacturers from giving rebates for large purchasse and enable small merchants to buy godos at the same prices as chain stores who order in carload lots.

The bill, its champions said, also would ban rebates in exchange for expenditures for advertising by firms making purchases from manufacturers or jobbers.

Wheeler Sammons, managing director of the Institution of Distribution in New York, defended chain stores and charged the Robinson-Patman measure would constitute a "hidden tax" to be paid by the consumer.

"The measure as drawn," he said, "would prevent manufacturers and producers from giving special rebates and allowances to their retail customers who buy in profitably large quantities and the ultimate effect would be the reduction o fthe savings passed along to the consumer-public."

Senate Group Acts Today on HagoodInquiry

Proposal For Investigation of Rebuke to Be Rejected, Is Report.

By the Associated Press.

A special Senate Military Affairs sub-committee will decide today whether to recommend a Senate investigation of the "punishment" of Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood.

While sub-committee members declined to discuss their intentions, there were indications elsewhere that the Republican-requested proposal for an inquiry would be rejected.

The sub-committee devoted about two hours yesterday, in executive session, to a resolution introduced by Senator Metcalf, (Republican), Rhode Island, requesting the Senate inquire into the War Department's order relieving Gen. Hagood from command of the Eighth Corps Area at San Antonio, after he criticized the Administration's WPA spending policies.

Logan on Committee.

The committee is composed of Logan (Democrat), Kentucky; Duffy (Democrat), Wisconsin, and Carey (Republican), Wyoming.

The Metcalf resolution was designed to disclose whether Gen. Hagood's right of free speech had been abridged, who was responsible for the order, why it was issued and whether such "punishment" was in accordance with usual military disciplinary measures.

Gen. Malin Craig, Army chief of staff, who directed Hagood's suspension, yesterday asked Congress to authorize a $30,000,000 Army housing program.

He testified before a House Military sub-committee which, in open session at least, did not deal with the controversy touched off when Hagood said WPA was spreading "stage money" over the country and the Army was not getting enough for housing.

Craig said the "housing situation has been at a standstill for three years so far as regular appropriations are concerned" and recent efforts to obtain money from WPA have failed.

He agreed with committeemen that some Army projects were removed from centers of unemployment, that their man-year cost was relatively high and that they could not meet WPA standards.

From the 1935 relief appropriations, however, the Army received $14,672,766 for housing, of which $5,304,621 was for new construction and the remainder for maintenance.

While the Army needs $178,000,000 for repairs and construction, Craig said, $150,000,000 is of "high priority."

Wallace Names Davis to Direct AAA Activities

Records of Old Set-up Are Made Available to New Administrator.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Wallace, prior to entraining for Memphis, Tenn., to help open the new AAA-soil conservation drive, formally announced last night that AAA Administrator Chester C. Davis would be in charge of the National program.

It had been generally supposed that Davis and his staff would continue in their present capacities, but the Secretary said there had been numerous inquiries for an official statement. After describing the authority vested in him by Congress, Wallace said:

"In the administration of such sections, Chester C. Davis, the administrator, is authorized and directed to utilize the services of the personnel and the books, files, records, papers, equipment and all other property of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration."

The order had the effect of making available to the new farm program the AAA record on lands retired from cultivation by AAA production control contracts outlawed in the Supreme Court, and supplying a ready-made basis for computing allotment awards to farmers co-operating with the Government.

All questions pertaining to the new plan, is was said, will be considered by simultaneous conferences starting today at Memphis and Chicago, and again on March 9 to 11, at regional meetings in New York and Salt Lake City. In addition to AAA officials, the gatherings were scheduled to include State officials of National farm organizations, State agricultural colleges and State agricultural extension services.

Misdirected Criticism.

The Republican National Committee was doubly ill-advised in its criticism of President Roosevelt and his "spending-masters-general" for being able to spend "only one-third" of the work-relief appropriation up to the end of last calendar year. The implication was that much of the fund is being held back for campaign effect.

In the first place, as G. O. P. headquarters later admitted, the fact is that this appropriation, under the terms of the act, is "to remain available until June 30, 1937." Since one-third of the money was spent in one-fourth of the allotted period, the rate has been actually ahead of the schedule set by Congress. Furthermore, the President indicated yesterday that by the end of this year all the present work-relief fund will be obligated.

In the second place, criticism should be concentrated on the methods and not the rate of relief expenditures, which has been all too rapid for efficient and economical administration. The WPA is to be praised, not blamed, for such delays in the outpourings of cash as it has encouraged.

Had there been more, rather than fewer, of these checks there would not now be instances like that reported from Pittsburgh. There a man and wife have this week been sent to jail for drawing $706 in relief while possessing nearly $12,000 in local bank deposits. Nobody knows how many abuses of this sort are still undiscovered. But unquestionably the slipshod, hasty, incompetent character of the WPA setup has invited the most flagrant petty fraudulence throughout the length and breadth of the Nation.

When the full story comes to be written the deceit encouraged by WPA, and the national demoralization attendant upon its policy of spending first and inquiring afterward, will form a sordid chapter in American history. The organization has done nothing toward real solution of the unemployment problem. Its one value of temporary relief has been achieved at a most inordinate cost. This is so indisputable, and so well realized throughout the country, that the WPA, far from being a political asset, is one of the blunders the Administration will find most difficult to live down in the eyes of the electorate.

Paralyzing Strikes.

The strike of building service employes in New York cannot fail to interest the entire country. Some sections of that city have been literally paralyzed, and the Building Service Employes' Union has threatened to duplicate the situation in every large city, if necessary to win the fight of the local union. Thus the business activities of the entire country might be seriously crippled by an obscure labor dispute in Manhattan.

Obviously, this threat raises a problem of far-reaching importance. If only the strikers and the companies by which they are employed were affected, a showdown might be reached without any serious consequences. But in this case the public interest is acutely involved. No organization of either employes or employers should be permitted to disrupt an entire community in a dispute over wages and conditions of work.

The Department of Labor is making an earnest effort to terminate the strike, in co-operation with Mayor LaGuardia. But, as Edward F. McGrady, Assistant Secretary of Labor, told newspapermen in New York, he cannot force the disputing employers and employes to accept him as a mediator. Since this is a local strike, the responsibility for its settlement in an orderly manner seems to fall clearly upon the governments of New York State and New York City. And apparently neither has worked out any policy for handling situations of this kind.

It is time for recognition of the public interest in labor disputes that impose critical hardships on people in no way involved in the controversy. Perhaps at least submission to arbitration in such cases will have to be made compulsory. At any rate, a system should be worked out under which essential service would continue to be rendered while negotiations for a settlement go forward. The National Labor Board was supposed to be of value in this field. But either it has ignored New York, or vice versa.

It Is Outrageous.

Public health is the first concern of every modern community. Other municipal services count for little when life itself is considered so cheap as to be unworthy of reasonable safeguards. When a city neglects this fundamental duty, the resulting sickness and premature death are a tragic commentary on the intelligence of its government.

According to the sub-committee which reported the District appropriations bill to the House, Washington is an extremely favored city. From the bubbling optimism of this report one would expect to find the Capital one of the most healthy spots in the Nation. Instead, a deplorable picture looms out of Census Bureau statistics. Washington's death rate was 17.2 per 1,000 in 1935, compared with 11.4 for the country as a whole. The tuberculosis death rate in Washington is 123 per 100,000, compared with 56.6 for the entire United States.

This disgraceful situation in the "privileged" Capital is demonstrably a result of inadequate public health appropriations. The American Public Health Association has found that proper health service cannot be rendered for less than $2 to $2.50 per capita. Washington's allowance in 1935 was 80 cents per capita, which certain Congressmen seem to consider too high. Out of every dollar spent for general governmental expenses in the District only 1.6 cents goes for public health. The average for other American cities of comparable size is 2.8 cents. Instead of using its funds to safeguard the health of its citizens, Washington is compelled to maintain the seat of Federal Government, and is then told of the great advantages which accrue from this situation.

Every branch of the local public health service is crippled for want of funds. Last year Congress did grant the Health Department funds to employ additional nurses. But it is denied appropriations to buy even the most meager equipment for them. For want of nursing stations in those sections of the city where this service is most needed, time and money is wasted in traveling between the District Building and the home of every patient in need of aid.

Health regulations call for the examination of school children to eliminate communicable diseases and to point out physical defects that need correction. With the present staff of doctors, working only part time, it is possible to examine only the children in kindergarten and the first grade. In the other grades protection against preventable maladies is patently inadequate.

Even more serious is the lack of equipment in the Health Department laboratory. Medical science has perfected remedies for the various types of pneumonia, for example. But these cannot be used effectively here because the laboratories are not equipped to do pneumonia "typing." The equipment has never been up to standard. Some improvements were made in predepression years, as suggested by the $946 appropriation for laboratory equipment in 1930. But last year only $45 was allowed for that purpose.

No one can fairly review this situation without reiterating Dr. Ruffin's declaration that "it is outrageous." And all fair-minded members of Congress will doubtless join in that expression if the facts ever come officially to their attention. The appalling fact is, however, that the House committee slashed the already emasculated health budget without even inquiring into the local health situation. Even before the famous mass meeting, attempts of the Medical Society to apprise the sub-committee of the District's health needs were unsuccessful. After that meeting the sub-committee chairman refused to talk with any "damned doctors."

Dr. Ruhland was granted the privilege of appearing before the committee. But the record shows that he had no opportunity to outline the dangerous neglect of public health here. Instead, the committee members spent their time attacking him for daring to tell the public that Washington has a health problem. In effect Dr. Ruhland was informed that he should say nothing about the disgraceful conditions which menace all local residents because that might be embarrassing to the handful of politicians who exercise a dictatorship over local affairs.

With the situation now clearly revealed, the campaign for a rational health program reaches a crisis. The sub-committee not only acted in ignorance. It even tried to intimidate a conscientious public servant for the purpose of keeping the public equally ignorant on matters which affect it vitally. Such tactics are not the less intolerable because they are directed against a disfranchised and therefore helpless community.

The Successor Is The Test.

No legitimate objection can be raised to the refusal of the Reserve Board to approve the appointment of an official past 70 as head of the Philadelphia Federal Reserve bank. George W. Norris, the rejected appointee, has served as governor of the bank for 16 years, and has reached the retirement age. However vigorous and capable he may be, there is force in the argument that a younger man should be selected to head the institution for so long a period as the next five years.

The question of more immediate interest to the public concerns the selection of a successor to Mr. Norris. Allegation that hostile political influences have been at work to remove him from his post can only be met by the appointment of a man whose record raises him above suspicion that his trained judgment would be influenced by political affiliations, or that his course of action could be modified by political pressure.

Inopportune And Inadequate.

Less than a year ago President Roosevelt presented Congress with his "soak-the-rich" tax program. His present proposal, which would effect a really revolutionary change in our system of corporate taxation, is, like that earlier plan, urged primarily as a tax-reform measure. The fiscal aspect is relatively unimportant compared with its economic and social significance.

In his tax message, in fact, the President places chief emphasis upon the necessity of a reform in methods of levying taxes upon corporate income in order to prevent the accumulation of surpluses. There is only a brief reference to the estimated returns from the proposed taxes, and no attempt to justify them as an exceptionally effective means of helping to balance the budget.

The assumption that the President is more interested in reforms than in a comprehensive tax plan that would make a real impression upon the deficit is strengthened by the sketchy nature of his suggestions. We are left in the dark—unless or until the Treasury enlightens us—as to how high the proposed tax rates should be, and how graduated. There is likewise no knowing what latitude would be allowed corporations in building up tax-exempt reserves for depreciation and working capital. Lacking these pertinent facts it is impossible to gauge the revenue-producing potentialities of the new corporate tax program or to judge how it will affect management.

Undoubtedly abuses have resulted in some instances from the freedom to withhold earned dividends from stockholders. Reinvestment of surpluses may have occurred at the expense of investors who would have benefited more from present dividends than from hopes of future returns. More important socially, overdevelopment of industrial capacity has at times been fostered by our practice of expansion from surplus. On the other hand, the wisdom of conservative managements in withholding part of the profits of prosperous years for distribution in lean years has been strikingly exemplified during the depression.

Had it not been for the surplus funds in the possession of corporate managements, the cuts in wage rates, the decline in employment, the loss of purchasing power, would all have been much more severe than has been the case. In other words, the surplus funds cushioned the shock of depression just as they had moderated the rapidity of the preceding rise. It seems highly anomalous for an Administration which has consistently stressed the importance of putting business on an even keel, and building up employment reserves against bad times, to advocate a taxing policy that threatens destruction to one of our traditional stabilizing influences.

Admitting that our present system of corporate taxation leaves great latitude to a dominant group in determining the disposition of earned income, the remedy proposed for this evil is a very dubious alternative. It would require corporations to make constant appeals for investment funds with which to finance an expansion program. Public bond offerings might lead to most unwise additions to fixed charges. Stock offerings might not be feasible. Moreover, many small but sound concerns would find it impossible to obtain capital through public sales of securities, and private funds would often not be available.

These obstacles to new financing are of course especially formidable when a country is emerging from a prolonged depression. Corporations faced by the prospect of having their future surplus earnings taxed out of existence will be inclined to keep them in liquid form, instead of pursuing a more liberal policy of expansion. There is little reason to believe that increased dividends scattered among thousands of investors would at this juncture constitute an investment backlog that would replace the dispersed surpluses.

In any case, we cannot go far toward balancing the budget by dissipating corporate reserves needed to finance recovery. The program outlined by the President might not prove very onerous in practice if the Treasury were disposed to moderation and reason in administering the new taxes. But the very uncertainty on this score is a fresh cause of disquiet. The "tax-the-surplus," like the "soak-the-rich" slogan is calculated to upset business confidence and to have a depressing effect upon the heavy industries which would profit most by the utilization of corporate surpluses.

At this juncture the country acutely needs taxes for revenue, designed to distribute the tax burden over a larger proportion of the population. Piece-meal efforts at reform, like those now proposed, are both inopportune and inadequate.

What Mr. Sullivan Said.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I trust you will lose no time in retracting the unwarranted statements made in your paper this morning concerning me. I asserted to the sub-committee on Education of the House District Committee that a study magazine in use in the public schools "recommended or featured" morally debasing literature, as to which I was prepared to give specific data.

Congressman Ellenbogen failed to catch the word "featured," and thought I had used the word "recommended" alone, and consequently expressed himself as he did. The qualifying words "or featured" were used by me in the first instance, out of abundant fairness. As a matter of fact, the featuring of morally debasing literature to pupils of impressionable and inquisitive age (as high school pupils are, or course) is tantamount to recommending such literature, as every intelligent person knows.

These facts are not dealt with at all in your article, which substitutes for them the false statement that I first charged that a study magazine was "advocating communism," and then, upon being checked by Congressman Ellenbogen, qualified and changed it to "featuring communism." You have thus featured and supported the utterly unwarranted assertion of Congressman Ellenbogen that "there's no truth in any of your (my) statements." I shall expect an immediate retraction with equal prominence with your charge.

Notes on Traffic Safety.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I think you are due considerable praise for your courageous drive or campaign for safety of the streets and highways. I feel that you have been somewhat inconsistent, however. You have carried many headlines on the abuses committed by members of Congress under their immunity, but I have not yet seen one word in your columns about the lack of regard for the other driver displayed by the operator of buses and cabs.

Have you ever seen a bus driver make even a reasonable attempt to clear the road so that the driver behind him might go on while he was stopping to take on or let off passengers? Have you ever seen one of them drive, even reasonably, close to the right hand side of the road? Yet I have not noticed one word about these and similar abuses of the driving rules by these operators in your column. I am sure there must a few cases where a member of Congress will have violated the rules of safety but, I believe, they are quite rare as compared with the case above mentioned.

Let us look at the other side for a moment. Why is it necessary when an officer stops a motorist that he should park his car in the middle of the drive while he reprimands the motorist? While on the subject of the officer: Why are they so discourteous and at times even insulting? Take, for example, the case of the recent arrest of the foreign diplomat in Maryland. I feel the arrest fully justified, but certainly not the language and other incidents that occurred. This statement is based only upon the account of the affair as appeared in your columns.

Your driving rules are very good except that since severity is relative it should be used with great discretion. In one family a $25 fine might be more severe than a $500 in another family, but one day or five days would be relatively the same.

This is intended constructively that through your columns you may bring about greater safety and consideration.

"Round And Round."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

In The Post of March 4 there appeared a letter under the head "Paths for Rock Creek" in which a "Harassed Pedestrian" asked for proper facilities for walking there.

I'm in perfect agreement with this correspondent, because there are times when I, and everyone else, would like to go out to Rock Creek with a jug, a best-seller and a friend beside them and walk peacefully along without having to jump like a kangaroo every time a motorist honked his horn or a horse came snorting along the bridle path. Bridle paths lead to bridal paths in lots of cases, but not with a steady flow of traffic acting as chaperone. So I'm all for bigger and better walks in Rock Creek Park.

But my point is this—why use WPA money, as suggested by this correspondent, for making paths in parks safe when a pedestrian can't even get across Thirteenth and E street without taking his life in his hands? Why not a guard of WPA workers to stand there and make those cruising taxicabs observe "pedestrians' rights?" When the light is green for the pedestrian, there are so many cabs coming around that corner by the Earle Theater that it is impossible to cross before the light changes to red, and then cars coming from another direction catch the poor pedestrian midstream. And he finds himself going "round and round" in an effort to get across.

If "walk lights" are to be established, as per your editorial of March 4, please use your influence to get one installed at Thirteenth and E streets. Getting across that street reduces a poor working girl's lunch time by fully 10 minutes.

Compassion Wanting.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The complaints of Marion Havershaw, in a letter published in The Post, reveal the fact that the psychological condition of the people as a whole is at fault.

We have had even during previous administrations girls coming to us with the complaints that they are compelled to hurry to catch up with the fastest workers, and while we have been able to fortify them mentally so that they could continue under those conditions so that they would not worry themselves sick it is, however, evident that the whole Nation is more or less being unbalanced psychologically.

The situation reverts to the problem of unemployment, for which I have an entirely different formula to bring about a change in the psychology of the Nation, so that every one will realize the necessity of cultivating the spirit of mutual helpfulness. In fact, unless something like this is done, some day we may come to find ourselves in need of the Mohammedan religion in order to inculcate the idea of compassion in us.

The Attack On Our Liberties.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

I spent Monday at the Red rider hearing, and still am almost unable to credit the evidence given there of narrowness, prejudice and survival of the spirit of Salem witch-burning days. All this in the Capital of a country in which the common school has flourished since its birth.

I went "audi alterem partem," with an open mind. I was sincerely willing to hear evidence and argument.

There was no argument. There was no evidence. Aspersions, allegations, special pleading there were in plenty. Something was in a book. Mr. Ballou has no business to allow the book to be brought into a classroom. Something was in a magazine about communism. At first the speaker said "advocating communism." He allowed himself to be corrected when faced with proof that it was not so. The magazine only described communism.

What do they want, these "smellers-out" of "communistic activities" in Washington public schools?

I went to the hearing to find out. Sincerely hoping that the truth, their truth, would come out so that something could be done about it. But they have nothing up their sleeves. The nature of Mr. Ballou's comments for which they want his scalp—and say so—is simply that he has talked like an educator—that's all!

What exactly DO they want, besides? Apparently that every mention of communism should be accompanied with a flat declaration that it is everything rotten and evil. They said in effect, almost in these words, again and again at Monday's hearing: "We don't mind communism being talked about, or taught in the schools IF the other side of it is explained, the terrible side, where they advocate all sorts of monstrous, inhuman, even obscene beliefs, like nationalization of women, destruction of the family, violent seizure of other people's goods, and so forth."

What would happen if, not content to explain as best she can the working of communism as practiced in Russia, the teacher should go on and explain how several communistic colonies have had a more or less long life in this United States. Born of Fourier's ideas, and Robert Owen's concepts of an idealistic community life—New Harmony, Ind.; Oneida, N. Y.; the Amasa colony in Iowa. All died of inability to survive outside inducements offered its young in a pioneer country, when the religious catalytic that held the community together finally disappeared. Young people wouldn't give adherence to the communistic first requirements: "To each according to his need. From each according to his ability," when good jobs waited outside. Each got according to both his needs and his ability and left the old faith and the old community life.

Our own Brook Farm experiment in communism, fathered by Emerson and Alcott, would have found itself on Maj. Gen. Fries' "spider-web list" of Reds, along with the League of Women Voters and others, had it been contemporaneous.

Whirlwind confusion of mind seems to all all these smellers-out of "false and destructive tendencies" in our schools. They seem to be unable to make any distinction between the social and economic theory of communism and the excesses of revolution which come in a country where an autocratic form of government has broken down and left the people stranded.

This country is a people's country. It started that way from scratch. It never had an entrenched and supposedly God-installed aristocracy. Hence no need of violent (if any) overthrow of rulers. Excesses on the part of our leaders can be cured. Easy (comparatively) and altogether constitutional methods are provided by the forefathers, who were, by the way, as near to the French Revolution as we to the Russian, hence aware to the roots of what causes a great people's woes, and they definitely provided ways to avert them.

If we lose our liberties, if we allow witch-hunters and sorcery smellers-out to destroy them for us, on our own heads be the blame. Attacking the fundamentals of our institutions, free speech and the freedom of academic expression, otherwise our educators' freedom of speech, the super-patriots themselves begin the sorry work of "boring in"—like termites undermining foundations. "We the people of the United States" do not value what we have sufficiently.

My private conviction, gained from following this Red rider controversy, is that behind these people who honestly speak their minds—such as they are—in behalf of the muzzling "Red rider," are sinister forces enormously more important, that are striving to blanket the educational system of this country. They do not want to see a day in the United States when all the people genuinely and honestly know exactly all their rights, and how, constitutionally to enforce them.

The Post Impressionist

"Music Hath Charms."

Post Office, Thursday.

IT WAS two two years ago that she started teaching Music-Appreciation (for beginners) in one of the Washington high schools. Yet even now she confesses to moments of doubt concerning the progress she has made.

* * *

Really, it is a course that ought to be given. Really, it is a good course—and gentle.

It is not too ambitious, not too difficult. It is interesting.

Also, it is popular. You don't have to take it if you don't want to. We are not quite clear about the substitute possibilities, but we think you are allowed to take the lower calculus or abattoir anatomy, if your parents insist. Notwithstanding which, most of the pupils in that high school prefer our friend's course in Music-Appreciation, and most of their parents approve the preference.

This, the teacher admits, is the way it should be.

Obviously, young people should be taught to appreciate music. Obviously there should be no attempt to whip them into appreciating it. Obviously, then, the start should be gradual, the approach entertaining.

Well, our friend's course meets all these requirements.

Nevertheless, there are those doubts.

Admitting that her work contains all the elements of popularity, she does wonder why it is popular. She wonders whether her pupils' enthusiasm is one hundred per cent sincere.

"You see," she confessed to us, "it becomes a little discouraging when you have to admit that a boy like Bill is a typical pupil. Bill has been in my class since the first of February. He seems to drink in my every word. He sits there with hands clasped, eyes wide—mouth wide, too.

"But the other day he had to write the word 'harmony.' I had been talking about harmony for two weeks—and yet Bill wrote it:

"'Hominy.'

"Of course," she said, "I have had to tell my class all about Apollo, because he was the ancient Greeks' god of music. Well, I have had to correct their spelling of his name so often—A-p-p-o-l-o, A-p-p-o-l-l-o, A-p-o-l-o, A-p-u-l-o and P-o-l-o—that now, when I come to write it myself, I have to consult the Dictionary of Mythology."

* * *

She said:

"Then there is 'rhythm.' Our class generally makes two full syllables of it, when pronouncing it, and we spell any one of at least 18 ways:

rhythum	rhithum	rhuthum
rhythem	rhithem	rhuthem
rythum	rithum	ruthum
rithem	rithm	rythm
ruthm	rhuthm	rhythn
rothm	rhume	rum

And new recruits are volunteering for the ranks daily.

"However," said the teacher, "you mustn't think that my troubles have to do only with spelling; after all, even some of the greatest musicians were not distinguished for their accuracy in spelling. I'm afraid, sometimes, my trouble goes deeper.

* * *

"For instance," she continued, "after all the pains I went to about Polo—I mean Apollo—I waited a week and then asked Gertrude:

"'Who was the ancient Greeks' god of music?'

"I thought Gertrude was one of my most apt pupils. She plays the piano a little, sings well and loves to sing; she had seemed enamored with the musical lore that I was trying to impart. Well, without a moment's hesitation, she answered:

"'The ancient Greeks' god of music was Judas.'

"Although it took some detective-work, I finally solved the mystery. Polo was mentioned at the top of a certain page in our text-book. A few lines farther down the same page was that quotation about the time

"'When Jubal struck the coral-shell'

"This had sufficed for Gertrude. If you'll read Genesis IV:21, you'll see why. Gertie had read it. She had read the New Testament as well. So her mind didn't have to do anything except confuse the two Dispensations with each other and then confuse the result with Olympus."

The Post-Impressionist ventured to suggest that not even a lack of interest in ancient patrons music proved a lack of musical appreciation.

"No-o," said the teacher—"and, in my saner moments, I believe all my pupils are really beginning to appreciate music, willy-nilly." She seemed comforted. "I had them," said she, "send in anonymous replies to the query, 'Why did you choose this course?' and half the replies read: 'Because it's easy.'

"But," our educator hopefully concluded, "I can easily remedy that!"

Fair Enough

Young Starhemberg

Vienna, March 4.

THERE is a dictator in this country, just as there is in Germany and Italy, but the Austrians are not cradle robbers, like Hitler and Mussolini, and the country is not infested with a bunch of nasty little brats shouting "Heil!" and "Doochay!" who are spoiling for a good slap in the mush.

There seems to be some obscurity about the dictatorship in Austria. The Chancellor is Kurt von Schuschnigg, an intellectual and leader of the Catholic party, but the vice chancellor is more spectacular and a more active force.

He is Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, a young fellow of about 38, whose family is older than that of the Hapsburgs. He is the leader of the Fatherland Front, which is the name of the local Ku Klux, and he's quite a bit of a fellow in his way.

It must be remembered that Austria is now a bush league country, with fewer inhabitants than metropolitan New York, and her dictatorship is a lower-case reproduction of the great European tyrannies of the present time, lacking the childishness of the German and Italian regimes.

• • • •

THERE is no effort to put over either Schuschnigg or Starhemberg as a god, a demigod or a great national spirit speaking from the skies. They are just Austrians—and tough guys—trying to run things with a firm hand but without a complete sacrifice of ordinary sense.

Young Starhemberg sometimes appears in uniform for public occasions, to jab his thumbs in his belt, throw out his chest and put on an act somewhat similar to that of Benito Mussolini. But, as a rule, he prefers to go around in civilian clothes, and he has not cut himself off from social diversions to withdraw into a cloud.

He may drop into the Imperial Hotel of an afternoon for a cocktail and a word with the boys and girls, and he seems more comparable to the new King of England or Carol of Rumania than either of the grim and gruesome supermen who have been trying to bull their way into the respective gayeties of Germany and Italy these last few years.

Edward, of England, is a man who has always liked his grog and a word with the blonde at the corner table, and Carol, though he has been pretty severely reviled by men of similar tastes for the mode of his domestic life, is, after all, just another young fellow who lives by the way as he travels through life.

• • • •

ONE of these days we will get around to the admission that one of the reasons why the new King of England is so popular in the United States is the fact that he has always evinced what the Old Soak called a fellow feeling for liquor and fun. And then we may withdraw certain priggish objections to Carol's private conduct and judge him on his performance in his job.

Everything in this Austrian dictatorship is on a reduced scale, and that applies to the ferocity of the strong-arm authority as well as to the dimensions of the country.

When Hitler goes out a thousand guards, all trained to athletic fitness and schooled to the incredibly brutish disregard for human decency which is the Nazi ideal, go with him and cow the populace into a state of cringing adulation.

When Mussolini has a date the tough guys go ahead to clear the path of the superman and line the streets with troops and jabbering subjects.

But young Starhemberg often goes about Vienna in a very informal manner—attended by his flycops, of course, but otherwise pretty much in the character of one of the lively young men about a lively old town.

They haven't much of a country any more, and they are trying to keep what little they have left from Mussolini on one side, Hitler on another and Stalin still another. All they want, as it seems to me, is to have a little fun once again. They haven't had a laugh in this country since the summer of 1914, and that was 22 years ago. The Thirty Years' War was not much longer.

Two Painters Hurt In Fall of Scaffold

Two house painters were injured seriously yesterday when a scaffold fell four floors to the pavement in the 200 block of Indiana avenue northwest.

Hampton Thompson, 28, who was at work on the scaffold when it plunged the 30 feet to the ground, suffered internal injuries. Earl Fertig, 40, his helper, who was standing below the scaffold at the time of the accident, may have a fractured back.

Both men were rushed to Emergency Hospital, where physicians said their condition was grave.

They were engaged in painting and decorating the four-story structure of the Acacia Life Insurance Building. Neither lost consciousness at the time of crash.

Frederic March Aids Cagney Contract Suit

Los Angeles, March 4 (AP).—Costumed as a French army officer, Frederic March testified today supporting James Cagney's contention that more than four pictures a year would injure his career.

March, appearing in Superior Court at the trial of Cagney's contract suit against Warner Brothers Studio, came directly from a film lot.

"I think that more than four pictures a year would be detrimental to Cagney's career," March testified.

Cagney is asking the court to abrogate his present $4,500 weekly contract with Warner Brothers on the ground he was required to appear in five pictures in one year.

Russia Ready to Fight, Stalin Warns Japan

Tokyo Attack on Mongolia Will Bring Soviet Troops to Defense, Dictator Tells U. S. Writer

By ROY W. HOWARD.

Chairman of the Board, Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

(World Copyright by Scripps-Howard Newspapers.)

Moscow, March 4.—The Soviet Union is prepared to go to war with Japan if necessary to prevent destruction of the independence of its virtual political ally, the Mongolian Peoples' Republic—Outer Mongolia.

Revelation of the high tension now existing and how importantly the Soviet regards the increasing friction in the Manchukuo-Mongolian area was made by Josef V. Stalin to the writer in the course of a three-hour discussion of Soviet relationship to general world events, war threats and Soviet-American relations particularly.

The discussion, with Constantin Oumansky, newly appointed counselor of the Washington Embassy, as the third party, interpreting, was held in Stalin's office in the Kremlin.

The interview was free from forensics and dramatics. He has never sought publicity or a reputation for color.

JOSEF STALIN.

Little to Reveal Power.

There is little in his manner to reveal the almost mystic power with which he sways the will and emotions of 173,000,000 people. He is devoid of bombast. His demeanor is civilian, not heel-clicking and not military.

His greeting is friendly and the informality and ready humor which characterized the conversation are silk gloves covering an often demonstrated iron will.

At times he has the dogmatic manner of revolutionaries, but he employs a tolerance in discussion that veneers his past mastery of propaganda.

During the past weeks, the chief interest of Moscow newsmen has centered in developments on the Outer Mongolian frontier. Clashes between Japanese troops and those of the Mongolian Peoples' Republic, resulting in so-called border incidents, have been increasingly numerous.

Japan Plans Wedge.

Neutral military observers believe Japan is seeking to drive a wedge into Outer Mongolia by way of Manchukuo, intended to block off assistance for the Soviet through China proper in the event of war. With possession of Ulan Bator, the capital of Outer Mongolia, the Japanese air forces would be in an advantageous position to threaten the Trans-Siberian Railway at one of its most vulnerable points.

In response to a direct inquiry as to what the Soviet attitude would be should Japan launch her long-predicted military drive in Outer Mongolia, Stalin said:

"If Japan ventures to attack the Mongolian Peoples' Republic and seeks to destroy its independence, we have to be able to help that republic. Litvinoff's (Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet foreign commissar) assistant, Stomoniakoff, recently so informed the Japanese Ambassador in Moscow and called his attention to the unchangeable friendly relations which the Soviet Union has entertained with the Mongolian Peoples' Republic since 1921. We would help that republic as we did in 1921."

(In 1921, Red troops supported the Mongolians against White Russian troops backed by Japanese.)

"Would a Japanese attempt to seize Ulan Bator (Urga) make positive action by the Soviet Union necessary?" he was asked.

"Yes," was the unequivocal reply.

"Have recent events developed any new Japanese activities in this region which have been construed by the Soviets as of an aggressive nature?"

"The Japanese seem to be continuing to concentrate their troops on the frontier of the Mongolian Peoples' Republic," Stalin replied, "but so far there have been no new attempts to create border incidents."

"The Soviet Union appears to believe that Germany and Poland have aggressive designs against the Soviet Union and are planning military co-operation," was the next question. "Poland, however, has protested her unwillingness to permit any foreign troops to use her territory as a base for operation against a third nation. How does the Soviet Union envisage such aggression by Germany? From what position and in what direction would the German military forces operate?"

"History shows," Stalin replied, "that when a state is intent on war against another state, even one not adjacent, the aggressor seeks an intermediate state whose frontiers touch those of the object of her aggression.

Usually Finds Frontier.

"Usually, it is successful in finding such a frontier. This is accomplished sometimes by force, as in 1914 in Belgium, or by other means, as in 1918, when the Germans 'borrowed' the Latvian frontier in a drive against Leningrad.

"I do not know what specific frontiers would be best adapted to the German purposes, but I think they would find a people prepared to lend them a frontier."

"Seemingly the entire world today is predicting another great war. If it proves inevitable, when, Mr. Stalin, do you think it will come?"

"It is impossible to say. It may come very unexpectedly. Nowadays wars are not declared. They simply start.

"However, I feel that the position of the friends of peace is improving. They have the advantage of being able to work in the open by such instruments as the League of Nations with the assistance of powerful public opinion. They have tremendous support in the objection to war shared by the masses of all nations. There is today no people wanting war.

"On the other hand, the proponents of war must work in the dark, to their disadvantage. Nevertheless, it is not improbable that this very fact may tempt them to an act of desperation.

"One of the newest successes of the friends of peace is ratification of the Franco-Soviet mutual assistance pact by the French Chamber. This pact is a certain obstacle to the enemies of peace."

"Should war come, Mr. Stalin, where is it most likely to break out? Where are the war clouds more menacing, in the East or the West?"

"In my opinion, there are two focal points of danger—one in the Far East, in the zone of Japan, and the other in Europe, in the zone of Germany. What I have in mind are numerous statements in Japan by military men containing threats against other powers.

"It is difficult to say which is the more menacing war danger. They both exist and both are smoldering. Compared to either of these, the Italo-Ethiopian conflict is an episode.

"For the moment, perhaps, the situation in the Far East is more menacing, but the center of danger may shift to Europe.

"Evidence of this was Herr Hitler's recent interview in a Paris paper in which his statement, though pacific in terminology, carried with it threats against both France and the Soviet Union. It is symptomatic that even when Herr Hitler speaks peace he cannot dispense with threats."

"What situation or condition, in your opinion, Mr. Stalin, furnishes the chief war menace today?"

"Capitalism. You recall the origins of the last World War—the desires of the great powers to redivide the world. Today we face the same state of affairs.

Seek Territories.

"There are certain states which feel they have not shared equally in the distribution of territories, markets, raw materials, spheres of influence. Capitalism in its imperialistic phase is a system which regards war as a legitimate instrument for settling international disputes. Although it does not give this method legal status, it accepts it in fact."

"May there not be an element of danger in the genuine fear existing in what you term capitalistic countries of intent on the part of the Soviet Union to force its political theories on other nations?"

"There is no justification for such fear. If those to whom you refer believe that the people of the Soviet Union have any desire to alter the face of things by force or to change the established order in surrounding states by force, they are entirely mistaken.

"The people of the Soviet Union naturally would like to see the face of things changed in the outside world, but that matter is the business of the surrounding world itself. I fail to see how our mere ideas can menace any of these states if they are firmly seated in their saddles."

"Does that mean the Soviet Union has to any degree abandoned its plans and intentions of bringing about world revolution?"

"We never have had any such plan or intention."

"You appreciate, no doubt, Mr. Stalin, that much of the world has long entertained a different impression?"

"Well, Mr. Howard, that is a product of misunderstanding. A tragic misunderstanding. No, a comic one—well, tragi-comic. We Marxists believe that revolution will occur in other countries but only at a time when it will be considered possible or necessary by the revolutionists in each specific country.

"To attempt to export revolution is nonsense. Without desire within a country, there will be no revolution.

"The Russian people desired revolution and brought it about. Now we are engaged in building a society without classes.

"But to presume that we want to bring about revolution in other countries by interference with their national life, is unwarranted."

At this point the conversation turned to Litvinoff's letter of November 16, 1933, to President Roosevelt, containing the famous paragraph 4 reading, "Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of, or bringing about by force, or a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

"Why, Mr. Stalin, did Litvinoff sign this letter if compliance with the terms of paragraph 4 is incompatible with the interest of the Soviet Union or beyond its control?"

"Execution of paragraph 4 is within our control," declared Stalin. "We have carried out its provisions and will continue to do so. According to our constitution, political emigres have the right of asylum in our territory, the same right as in the United States.

Obligation Is Mutual.

"When Litvinoff signed the letter you mention, it was on the assumption that the obligation is mutual. Does it, in American opinion, conflict with the Roosevelt-Litvinoff agreement if there are White Russian emigres in America, sometimes representing terroristic groups, propagandizing on American soil for capitalism against the Soviets and receiving moral and material assistance from Americans?

"As far as we are concerned, we never would tolerate a single terrorist on our territory, regardless of against whom his crimes are contemplated. Apparently the American interpretation of the right of asylum is broader than ours.

"We do not mind. The argument can be advanced that we sympathize with foreign political emigres sojourning in our territory, but are there not Americans who sympathize with White Russian emigres propagandizing for capitalism against the Soviets?

"If so, what is most important is that we both don't assist or finance such activities and that official agents of both countries abstain from interfering with home affairs of other countries.

"However, if we go too far in claims and counter-claims on this subject and ask for the deportation of all White Russian emigres from the United States, then we might undermine the right of asylum existing in both countries. A reasonable limit to our claims and counter-claims must be recognized by each."

"Litvinoff signed the letter to Roosevelt not as a private citizen, but as a representative of the state, as did Roosevelt in his letter. This is an agreement between two states and its vital consideration concerns the activities of agents of those two states. The agreement, which is an understanding between two governments, can be interpreted only within this framework."

"Did not Browder and Darcy, American Communists appearing before the Seventh Congress of the Communist International in Moscow last summer, appeal for the overthrow by force of the American Government?"

"I don't recall what Browder and Darcy said. Maybe they said something of that nature, but the Soviet people did not found the American Communist Party.

"The American Communist Party was created by Americans. Its existence in the United States is legal. The American Communist Party is represented by ballot even in national elections.

"What Browder and Darcy may have said once in Moscow probably will be said a hundred times in stronger terms on American soil. It would be unfair to hold the Soviet government responsible for the activities of American Communists."

"But in this instance, is it not a fact that their activities occurred on Soviet soil contrary to the terms of paragraph 4?"

"You mention the activity of American Communists on Soviet soil, but what does activity of the Communist Party mean? Organization meetings, sometimes strikes, demonstrations, etc. They couldn't possibly organize them on Soviet soil. We have no American workers in the U. S. S. R."

"I take it that the gist of your thought, then, is that interpretation can be made which would safeguard and continue good relations between our countries?"

Communism Not Achieved.

"Yes, absolutely."

"Admittedly, communism has not been achieved in Russia. State socialism has. Have not fascism in Italy and national socialism in Germany claimed to have attained similar results? Have not both been achieved at the price of deprivation of personal liberty, sacrificed for the good of the state?"

"No, communism has not been achieved in the Soviet Union so far. It is not easy. But your term 'state socialism' is not exact.

"Many people refer to a condition as state socialism when a considerable amount of national wealth passes to government ownership, sometimes for military advantage, even though the majority of wealth remains in private hands.

"The social order which we have built up so far cannot be termed state socialism in this sense. The Soviet system is fundamentally socialistic because there is no private ownership of factories, land, banks, railways, mines, etc. Our system—which not yet has been quite completed—is socialistic because the foundation of society is common state's ownership, ownership by the people or ownership by co-operatives and collective farms.

"Italian fascism or German national socialism do not have any thing in common with such a system, because in those countries private ownership of industry is not affected. Capitalism in those countries still has full effectiveness.

No More Unemployment.

"Under socialism a certain inequality concerning property remains, but there is no more unemployment, exploitation or oppression of one nationality by another. Everybody is obliged to work and is compensated not according to his needs but according to the quantity and quality of the work.

"That is why wages have not been equalized. Only that society can be called communistic in which people are compensated not on the basis of the quantity or quality of the work produced, but on the basis of their needs.

"Perhaps you think socialist society discounts personal liberty, but that is not correct. If you are going to build a house you must economize and make sacrifices. Even more is it true if you are building a new society.

"It is necessary for us temporarily to limit certain of our demands to accumulate the necessary resources.

We have made this sacrifice with the definite objective of developing real freedom in the best sense of the term."

"Do you view as compatible," Stalin was asked, "the coincidental development of American democracy and the Soviet system?"

"Yes. American democracy and the Soviet system can exist and compete peacefully, but one can never develop into the other. Soviet democracy will never evolve into American democracy, or vice versa.

"We can exist and develop peacefully if we do not indulge in too much mutual fault-finding about trifling things."

Article Interests Capital.

Official Washington read Roy Howard's interview with Josef Stalin with interest yesterday, but except for the Soviet and Japanese Ambassadors, generally declined comment.

Japanese Ambassador Hirosi Saito said that Japan had no intention of provoking trouble with Russia, and "we hope to avoid future friction."

Soviet Ambassador Alexander Troyanovsky said he had "almost nothing to add" to Stalin's statements except to stress the Soviet desire for continued good relations with the United States.

Troyanovsky pointed out that Stalin categorically denied any intention to bring about world revolution and "called attention to the well known fact of activity against the Soviet Union on American soil tolerated for various reasons by American authorities."

"At any rate," the Ambassador continued, "if we indulge in too much mutual fault finding our country's claims will easily cover all counter-claims on America's part. It is better to abstain from arguments of that kind."

Mrs. Nixon Divorce Service Is Upheld

Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in the District Supreme Court, upheld the legality of the service of divorce papers on Mrs. Anne Cooke Nixon, third wife of Capt. Thomas Hay Nixon, U. S. A., who had challenged the "process" because the papers, she said, were thrust into her lap with such force they flew out of the automobile in which she was sitting.

The papers, it was shown, were placed in Mrs. Nixon's lap by Harold T. Scott, who was especially appointed by the District Supreme Court to serve them. Mrs. Nixon said they went out of the window and were lost.

The third Mrs. Nixon, sister of Jane Cooke Scarlett, who only recently lost a suit to annul her marriage to George Stanton Scarlett 3d, married the distinguished Army officer after he had obtained a divorce from his second wife, Mrs. Annette Pauline Nixon, in Pennsylvania.

New Mexico Blanketed As Dust Moves West

Albuquerque, N. Mex., March 4 (AP).—Dust storms, whipped up by high east winds in the Oklahoma Panhandle, skipped across the northwest tip of Texas today and laid a heavy pall over the Pecos Valley and the eastern plains of New Mexico.

It was New Mexico's most severe "duster" of 1936. Near Guymon, Okla., it was described as "one of the worst of the year."

Little damage was reported, however.

Peace Group Demands U. S. Arms Cost Data

New York, March 4 (AP).—A demand that Congress and President Roosevelt explain military outlays, "unprecedented in all our peacetime history," was addressed to them tonight by 450 college presidents and professors, church and business leaders and prominent citizens associated in the National Peace Conference.

The communication said the Government had failed to specify whether the armament was preparation for "again throwing some millions of men across the seas" or "only one of defense against attack." Signers said "The country has a right to know."

Southern Protest

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

Reporter Corrected.

IT is all right to accuse a New Yorker of saying New Yoik. And it is equally permissible to kid a Yankee for saying lore for law and hoss for horse. But never accuse a Southerner of saying "you all."

Just the other day I wrote me a powerful piece about Hugo Lafayette Black, the senatorial barrister from Birmingham, and in the course of my animadversions on this powerful prosecuting attorney, who was worming secrets from the lips of lobbyists, I said that he spoke with only a slight trace of a Southern accent. But, also, I said that he said "you all."

That, I now learn, is not permissible. Not even if you smile when you say that. A charming and even beautiful Southern lady of great culture has just been in to chide me and even now the room is filled with scent of jasmine and the walls are still echoing her soft Southern voice. She didn't once say "you all," but she did give me a right good dressing down for saying that the gentleman from Alabama did.

Well, all I know is that I heard him and I have a Hoosier reporter who says he is willing to rasp forth from the witness stand in my defense if called upon to do so. I do not think it will be necessary. For I am willing to take the Southern lady's word for the absence of "you alls" from Southern speech and retract my charge against Mr. Black.

• • • •

BEING no Joel Chandler Harris I will attempt no transcription of the soft-speaking of the Southern lady, with her mellow "ahs" for "I's," and her inimitably eliptical speech. Here, then, is a translation of her learned argument which, it seems, is not only against saying that Southerners say "you-all," but is also a defense of their saying it, if they wish to.

"Why, oh why," she wanted to know, "did you make that cliche crack at the South with 'you-all?' I hold no brief for Senator Black, I, too, think he is amusing—at times. But that 'you-all,' suh, is a crack at my section of the country, and I protest it.

"Except for such years as I have spent in New York City and other foreign climes, I have been in the South, and know most of its cities and rural communities very well, indeed. And I have yet to hear any Southerner, cultured or otherwise, use 'you-all' except with plural intent. This applies also to the Tennessee mountaineer, or what you would call the hillbilly, with his 'you uns' and 'we uns.'"

In the column which so stirred this Southern lady I had not signified whether Mr. Black's intent was plural or singular or just unintentional. But, come to think of it, he was talking just to one man when he said "you-all." Maybe he didn't mean to.

"John Masefield," she went on, "told me that the people he had met in America, who spoke English more nearly as it is spoken by the London literary set, were all Southerners. He elaborated upon this as including both construction and pronunciation."

• • • •

CULTURED Boston gentleman that I am, I let that insult to Brattle and Beacon streets pass by unchallenged, although it hurt! Mr. Masefield had told me the same thing one time when I had interviewed him, so there really wasn't much I could say.

"King Edward, in his radio speech," she went on, "said 'you all.' One of the news services commented upon it, intimating it was an Americanism. The commentator said the British were dumfounded. If the British noticed it at all, it is my guess that it was at the informality of not saying 'my subjects.'

"The fact that Mrs. Piers Leigh, the wife of one of Edward's favorite equerries when he was Prince of Wales, was born and reared in Nashville, Tenn., could not have been the entire responsibility for the past use of 'you all.'

"Did you ever spout Marc Antony's address over the dead body of Caesar in your extreme youth?"

We-uns hadn't, but nodded politely, nevertheless.

"Then you know that Shakespeare made Marc Antony say 'You all do know, etc.' And if Marc Antony could use 'you all' with telling effect, why not Edward VIII, and if Edward VIII, why not Senator Black, and they-all know they were using a good English term.'"

There seemed to be no answer to that. By now I was rather sorry I had aspersed the good Senator's speech, so I arose, and making a courtly bow, bade the lady adieu, and she swept out, leaving behind the scent of jasmine and the echo of her soft Southern voice.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Streamline Home.

All house construction, as we know it today, will be obsolete in ten years, the fabricated home, air conditioned, electrically heated, etc., replacing it, say experts.

• • • •

The Home, Sweet Home of today will soon be as old-fashioned as a Model T fivver.

• • • •

Presently the builder of a new house will go to a showroom, inspect the latest models, place his order and have it delivered within a few days.

• • • •

And after a few years he will probably be able to turn in his last year's house for a new one and get a handsome allowance.

• • • •

"How are you getting on in your new bungalow?" the salesman will ask.

"Pretty fair," you will reply. "It's giving me very good service."

"But the lines are getting old-fashioned, don't you think?"

"I suppose it's not as smart looking as it might be. I'm thinking of bringing it in for a general overhauling and a paint job."

"Don't do that. Let us take it in as part payment for a new bungalow," the salesman will press. "Have you seen our 1945 line of bungalows, cabins, houses and palaces?"

"I saw some of the models in the folders."

"Drop in and look 'em over. We're turning out a two-family house this season that has built-in upholstery, concealed radio sets, streamlined plumbing, eight point suspension bathtubs, nonshatterable glass and a spare sun porch."

• • • •

"What about the instrument board?"

"It's located in your den and you can control everything in the house from the dash. It has electric heater thermostat, air conditioning dial, six-day clock, cigarette lighter, and hydraulic door openers."

• • • •

"That's great, but I can't afford a new house this season."

"Nonsense. You can get it for a small down payment. Let me give you a demonstration."

"Do you demonstrate new houses?"

"Positively. We'll set one up this afternoon and let you try it."

"Okay. And while you're at it you might bring up one of those new interchangeable garages!"

Spring.

Refreshed by recent rains the river flows
Its joyful course beneath the budded trees,
And once dead banks renew their stubbly slopes
With violets and gay anemones;
The pliant soil is eager for the plow,
The robin struts with confidential air,
And quickening of spring can now be felt
Around us and about us everywhere.
Reluctant sunshine finally fulfills
Her promise of returning daffodils.

Many railroad men are bewailing the recent Interstate Commerce Commission order cutting passenger rates to two cents a mile, but it is this department's belief that it will boost their business. Railroad fares have been so high compared with bus fares that the railroads have been practically driving business into the buses.

Elmer Twitchell thinks, however, that a two-cent per mile rate is arbitrary. "Some miles are worth two cents," says Elmer, "and some are not. "Through New England in spring two cents a mile is practically a cut rate, but there are other sections any season of the year when the miles you see from a coach window ain't worth a dime a gross."

Federal Employes Barred as Jurors

Pending a ruling by the United States Court of Appeals as to the legality of a recent act of Congress making valid the presence of Federal employes on District juries, Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, in the District Supreme Court yesterday struck from the March panels all those who either held Government jobs or Government contracts.

A police court case, now pending in the Court of Appeals, is designed to test the right of Federal employes to sit in criminal cases and on the grand jury. In civil cases it has long been recognized that Government employes were legally qualified.

Most criminal cases tried in the Police Court and the District Supreme Court will not be affected by a ruling holding Federal employes disbarred from service. Only three cases, one involving a liquor ring, will be subject to the appellate decision, since in most instances defense attorneys did not avail themselves of the right to appeal because of the presence of Government employes.

Young Starhemberg

Vienna, March 4.

THERE is a dictator in this country, just as there is in Germany and Italy, but the Austrians are not cradle robbers, like Hitler and Mussolini, and the country is not infested with a bunch of nasty little brats shouting "Heil!" and "Doochay!" who are spoiling for a good slap in the mush.

There seems to be some obscurity about the dictatorship in Austria. The Chancellor is Kurt von Schuschnigg, an intellectual and leader of the Catholic party, but the vice chancellor is more spectacular and a more active force.

He is Prince Ernst Rudiger von Starhemberg, a young fellow of about 38, whose family is older than that of the Hapsburgs. He is the leader of the Fatherland Front, which is the name of the local Ku Klux, and he's quite a bit of a fellow in his way.

It must be remembered that Austria is now a bush league country, with fewer inhabitants than metropolitan New York, and her dictatorship is a lower-case reproduction of the great European tyrannies of the present time, lacking the childishness of the German and Italian regimes.

• • • •

THERE is no effort to put over either Schuschnigg or Starhemberg as a god, a demigod or a great national spirit speaking from the skies. They are just Austrians—and tough guys—trying to run things with a firm hand but without a complete sacrifice of ordinary sense.

Young Starhemberg sometimes appears in uniform for public occasions, to jab his thumbs in his belt, throw out his chest and put on an act somewhat similar to that of Benito Mussolini. But, as a rule, he prefers to go around in civilian clothes, and he has not cut himself off from social diversions to withdraw into a cloud.

He may drop into the Imperial Hotel of an afternoon for a cocktail and a word with the boys and girls, and he seems more comparable to the new King of England or Carol of Rumania than either of the grim and gruesome supermen who have been trying to bull their way into the respective gayeties of Germany and Italy these last few years.

Edward, of England, is a man who has always liked his grog and a word with the blonde at the corner table, and Carol, though he has been pretty severely reviled by men of similar tastes for the mode of his domestic life, is, after all, just another young fellow who lives by the way as he travels through life.

• • • •

ONE of these days we will get around to the admission that one of the reasons why the new King of England is so popular in the United States is the fact that he has always evinced what the Old Soak called a fellow feeling for liquor and fun. And then we may withdraw certain priggish objections to Carol's private conduct and judge him on his performance in his job.

Everything in this Austrian dictatorship is on a reduced scale, and that applies to the ferocity of the strong-arm authority as well as to the dimensions of the country.

When Hitler goes out a thousand guards, all trained to athletic fitness and schooled to the incredibly brutish disregard for human decency which is the Nazi ideal, go with him and cow the populace into a state of cringing adulation.

When Mussolini has a date the tough guys go ahead to clear the path of the superman and line the streets with troops and jabbering subjects.

But young Starhemberg often goes about Vienna in a very informal manner—attended by his flycops, of course, but otherwise pretty much in the character of one of the lively young men about a lively old town.

They haven't much of a country any more, and they are trying to keep what little they have left from Mussolini on one side, Hitler on another and Stalin still another. All they want, as it seems to me, is to have a little fun once again. They haven't had a laugh in this country since the summer of 1914, and that was 22 years ago. The Thirty Years' War was not much longer.

Russia Ready to Fight, Stalin Warns Japan

Germany Also Is Termed Danger Point; Russian Chief Regrets Differences With Washington

By ROY W. HOWARD.

Chairman of the Board, Scripps-Howard Newspapers.

(World Copyright by Scripps-Howard Newspapers.)

Moscow, March 4. — The Soviet Union is prepared to go to war with Japan if necessary to prevent destruction of the independence of its virtual political ally, the Mongolian Peoples' Republic—Outer Mongolia.

Revelation of the high tension now existing and how importantly the Soviet regards the increasing friction in the Manchukuo-Mongolian area was made by Josef V. Stalin to the writer in the course of a three-hour discussion of Soviet relationship to general world events, war threats and Soviet-American relations particularly.

The discussion, with Constantin Oumansky, newly appointed counselor of the Washington Embassy, as the third party, interpreting, was held in Stalin's office in the Kremlin.

The interview was free from forensics and dramatics. He has never sought publicity or a reputation for color.

JOSEF STALIN.

Little to Reveal Power.

There is little in his manner to reveal the almost mystic power with which he sways the will and emotions of 173,000,000 people. He is devoid of bombast. His demeanor is civilian, not heel-clicking and not military.

His greeting is friendly and the informality and ready humor which characterized the conversation are silk gloves covering an often demonstrated iron will.

At times he has the dogmatic manner of revolutionaries, but he employs a tolerance in discussion that veneers his past mastery of propaganda.

During the past weeks, the chief interest of Moscow newsmen has centered in developments on the Outer Mongolian frontier. Clashes between Japanese troops and those of the Mongolian Peoples' Republic, resulting in so-called border incidents, have been increasingly numerous.

Japan Plans Wedge.

Neutral military observers believe Japan is seeking to drive a wedge into Outer Mongolia by way of Manchukuo, intended to block off assistance for the Soviet through China proper in the event of war. With possession of Ulan Bator, the capital of Outer Mongolia, the Japanese air forces would be in an advantageous position to threaten the Trans-Siberian Railway at one of its most vulnerable points.

In response to a direct inquiry as to what the Soviet attitude would be should Japan launch her long-predicted military drive in Outer Mongolia, Stalin said:

"If Japan ventures to attack the Mongolian Peoples' Republic and seeks to destroy its independence, we have to be able to help that republic. Litvinoff's (Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet foreign commissar) assistant, Stomoniakoff, recently so informed the Japanese Ambassador in Moscow and called his attention to the unchangeable friendly relations which the Soviet Union has entertained with the Mongolian Peoples' Republic since 1921. We would help that republic as we did in 1921."

(In 1921, Red troops supported the Mongolians against White Russian troops backed by Japanese.)

"Would a Japanese attempt to seize Ulan Bator (Urga) make positive action by the Soviet Union necessary?" he was asked.

"Yes," was the unequivocal reply.

"Have recent events developed any new Japanese activities in this region which have been construed by the Soviets as of an aggressive nature?"

"The Japanese seem to be continuing to concentrate their troops on the frontier of the Mongolian Peoples' Republic," Stalin replied, "but so far there have been no new attempts to create border incidents."

"The Soviet Union appears to believe that Germany and Poland have aggressive designs against the Soviet Union and are planning military co-operation," was the next question. "Poland, however, has protested her unwillingness to permit any foreign troops to use her territory as a base for operation against a third nation. How does the Soviet Union envisage such aggression by Germany? From what position and in what direction would the German military forces operate?"

"History shows," Stalin replied, "that when a state is intent on war against another state, even one not adjacent, the aggressor seeks an intermediate state whose frontiers touch those of the object of her aggression.

Usually Finds Frontier.

"Usually, it is successful in finding such a frontier. This is accomplished sometimes by force, as in 1914 in Belgium, or by other means, as in 1918, when the Germans 'borrowed' the Latvian frontier in a drive against Leningrad.

"I do not know what specific frontiers would be best adapted to the German purposes, but I think they would find a people prepared to lend them a frontier."

"Seemingly the entire world today is predicting another great war. If it proves inevitable, when, Mr. Stalin, do you think it will come?"

"It is impossible to say. It may come very unexpectedly. Nowadays wars are not declared. They simply start.

"However, I feel that the position of the friends of peace is improving. They have the advantage of being able to work in the open by such instruments as the League of Nations with the assistance of powerful public opinion. They have tremendous support in the objection to war shared by the masses of all nations. There is today no people wanting war.

"On the other hand, the proponents of war must work in the dark, to their disadvantage. Nevertheless, it is not improbable that this very fact may tempt them to an act of desperation.

"One of the newest successes of the friends of peace is ratification of the Franco-Soviet mutual assistance pact by the French Chamber. This pact is a certain obstacle to the enemies of peace."

"Should war come, Mr. Stalin, where is it most likely to break out? Where are the war clouds more menacing, in the East or the West?"

"In my opinion, there are two focal points of danger—one in the Far East, in the zone of Japan, and the other in Europe, in the zone of Germany. What I have in mind are numerous statements in Japan by military men containing threats against other powers.

"It is difficult to say which is the more menacing war danger. They both exist and both are smoldering. Compared to either of these, the Italo-Ethiopian conflict is an episode.

"For the moment, perhaps, the situation in the Far East is more menacing, but the center of danger may shift to Europe.

"Evidence of this was Herr Hitler's recent interview in a Paris paper in which his statement, though pacific in terminology, carried with it threats against both France and the Soviet Union. It is symptomatic that even when Herr Hitler speaks peace he cannot dispense with threats."

"What situation or condition, in your opinion, Mr. Stalin, furnishes the chief war menace today?"

"Capitalism. You recall the origins of the last World War—the desires of the great powers to redivide the world. Today we face the same state of affairs.

Seek Territories.

"There are certain states which feel they have not shared equally in the distribution of territories, markets, raw materials, spheres of influence. Capitalism in its imperialistic phase is a system which regards war as a legitimate instrument for settling international disputes. Although it does not give this method legal status, it accepts it in fact."

"May there not be an element of danger in the genuine fear existing in what you term capitalistic countries of intent on the part of the Soviet Union to force its political theories on other nations?"

"There is no justification for such fear. If those to whom you refer believe that the people of the Soviet Union have any desire to alter the face of things by force or to change the established order in surrounding states by force, they are entirely mistaken.

"The people of the Soviet Union naturally would like to see the face of things changed in the outside world, but that matter is the business of the surrounding world itself. I fail to see how our mere ideas can menace any of these states if they are firmly seated in their saddles."

"Does that mean the Soviet Union has to any degree abandoned its plans and intentions of bringing about world revolution?"

"We never have had any such plan or intention."

"You appreciate, no doubt, Mr. Stalin, that much of the world has long entertained a different impression?"

"Well, Mr. Howard, that is a product of misunderstanding. A tragic misunderstanding. No, a comic one—well, tragi-comic. We Marxists believe that revolution will occur in other countries but only at a time when it will be considered possible or necessary by the revolutionists in each specific country.

"To attempt to export revolution is nonsense. Without desire within a country, there will be no revolution.

"The Russian people desired revolution and brought it about. Now we are engaged in building a society without classes.

"But to presume that we want to bring about revolution in other countries by interference with their national life, is unwarranted."

At this point the conversation I turned to Litvinoff's letter of November 16, 1933, to President Roosevelt, containing the famous paragraph 4 reading, "Not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any organization or group—and to prevent the activity on its territory of any organization or group, or of representatives or officials of any organization or group—which has as an aim the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of, or bringing about by force, or a change in, the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions."

"Why, Mr. Stalin, did Litvinoff sign this letter if compliance with the terms of paragraph 4 is incompatible with the interest of the Soviet Union or beyond its control?"

"Execution of paragraph 4 is within our control," declared Stalin. "We have carried out its provisions and will continue to do so. According to our constitution, political emigres have the right of asylum in our territory, the same right as in the United States.

Obligation Is Mutual.

"When Litvinoff signed the letter you mention, it was on the assumption that the obligation is mutual. Does it, in American opinion, conflict with the Roosevelt-Litvinoff agreement if there are White Russian emigres in America, sometimes representing terroristic groups, propagandizing on American soil for capitalism against the Soviets and receiving moral and material assistance from Americans?

"As far as we are concerned, we never would tolerate a single terrorist on our territory, regardless of against whom his crimes are contemplated. Apparently the American interpretation of the right of asylum is broader than ours.

"We do not mind. The argument can be advanced that we sympathize with foreign political emigres sojourning in our territory, but are there not Americans who sympathize with White Russian emigres propagandizing for capitalism against the Soviets?

"If so, what is most important is that we both don't assist or finance such activities and that official agents of both countries abstain from interfering with home affairs of other countries.

"However, if we go too far in claims and counter-claims on this subject and ask for the deportation of all White Russian emigres from the United States, then we might undermine the right of asylum existing in both countries. A reasonable limit to our claims and counter-claims must be recognized by each."

"Litvinoff signed the letter to Roosevelt not as a private citizen, but as a representative of the state, as did Roosevelt in his letter. This is an agreement between two states and its vital consideration concerns the activities of agents of those two states. The agreement, which is an understanding between two governments, can be interpreted only within this framework."

"Did not Browder and Darcy, American Communists appearing before the Seventh Congress of the Communist International in Moscow last summer, appeal for the overthrow by force of the American Government?"

"I don't recall what Browder and Darcy said. Maybe they said something of that nature, but the Soviet people did not found the American Communist Party.

"The American Communist Party was created by Americans. Its existence in the United States is legal. The American Communist Party is represented by ballot even in national elections.

"What Browder and Darcy may have said once in Moscow probably will be said a hundred times in stronger terms on American soil. It would be unfair to hold the Soviet government responsible for the activities of American Communists."

"But in this instance, is it not a fact that their activities occurred on Soviet soil contrary to the terms of paragraph 4?"

"You mention the activity of American Communists on Soviet soil, but what does activity of the Communist Party mean? Organization meetings, sometimes strikes, demonstrations, etc. They couldn't possibly organize them on Soviet soil. We have no American workers in the U. S. S. R."

"I take it that the gist of your thought, then, is that interpretation can be made which would safeguard and continue good relations between our countries?"

Communism Not Achieved.

"Yes, absolutely."

"Admittedly, communism has not been achieved in Russia. State socialism has. Have not fascism in Italy and national socialism in Germany claimed to have attained similar results? Have not both been achieved at the price of deprivation of personal liberty, sacrificed for the good of the state?"

"No, communism has not been achieved in the Soviet Union so far. It is not easy. But your term 'state socialism' is not exact.

"Many people refer to a condition as state socialism when a considerable amount of national wealth passes to government ownership, sometimes for military advantage, even though the majority of wealth remains in private hands.

"The social order which we have built up so far cannot be termed state socialism in this sense. The Soviet system is fundamentally socialistic because there is no private ownership of factories, land, banks, railways, mines, etc. Our system—which not yet has been quite completed—is socialistic because the foundation of society is common state's ownership, ownership by the people or ownership by co-operatives and collective farms.

"Italian fascism or German national socialism do not have any thing in common with such a system, because in those countries private ownership of industry is not affected. Capitalism in those countries still has full effectiveness.

No More Unemployment.

"Under socialism a certain inequality concerning property remains, but there is no more unemployment, exploitation or oppression of one nationality by another. Everybody is obliged to work and is compensated not according to his needs but according to the quantity and quality of the work.

"That is why wages have not been equalized. Only that society can be called communistic in which people are compensated not on the basis of the quantity or quality of the work produced, but on the basis of their needs.

"Perhaps you think socialist society discounts personal liberty, but that is not correct. If you are going to build a house you must economize and make sacrifices. Even more is it true if you are building a new society.

"It is necessary for us temporarily to limit certain of our demands to accumulate the necessary resources.

We have made this sacrifice with the definite objective of developing real freedom in the best sense of the term."

"Do you view as compatible," Stalin was asked, "the coincidental development of American democracy and the Soviet system?"

"Yes. American democracy and the Soviet system can exist and compete peacefully, but one can never develop into the other. Soviet democracy will never evolve into American democracy, or vice versa.

"We can exist and develop peacefully if we do not indulge in too much mutual fault-finding about trifling things."

Article Interests Capital.

Official Washington read Roy Howard's interview with Josef Stalin with interest yesterday, but except for the Soviet and Japanese Ambassadors, generally declined comment.

Japanese Ambassador Hirosi Saito said that Japan had no intention of provoking trouble with Russia, and "we hope to avoid future friction."

Soviet Ambassador Alexander Troyanovsky said he had "almost nothing to add" to Stalin's statements except to stress the Soviet desire for continued good relations with the United States.

Troyanovsky pointed out that Stalin categorically denied any intention to bring about world revolution and "called attention to the well known fact of activity against the Soviet Union on American soil tolerated for various reasons by American authorities."

"At any rate," the Ambassador continued, "if we indulge in too much mutual fault finding our country's claims will easily cover all counter-claims on America's part. It is better to abstain from arguments of that kind."

Southern Protest

By Karl Schriftgiesser.

Reporter Corrected.

IT is all right to accuse a New Yorker of saying New Yoik. And it is equally permissible to kid a Yankee for saying lore for law and hoss for horse. But never accuse a Southerner of saying "you all."

Just the other day I wrote me a powerful piece about Hugo Lafayette Black, the senatorial barrister from Birmingham, and in the course of my animadversions on this powerful prosecuting attorney, who was worming secrets from the lips of lobbyists, I said that he spoke with only a slight trace of a Southern accent. But, also, I said that he said "you all."

That, I now learn, is not permissible. Not even if you smile when you say that. A charming and even beautiful Southern lady of great culture has just been in to chide me and even now the room is filled with scent of jasmine and the walls are still echoing her soft Southern voice. She didn't once say "you all," but she did give me a right good dressing down for saying that the gentleman from Alabama did.

Well, all I know is that I heard him and I have a Hoosier reporter who says he is willing to rasp forth from the witness stand in my defense if called upon to do so. I do not think it will be necessary. For I am willing to take the Southern lady's word for the absence of "you alls" from Southern speech and retract my charge against Mr. Black.

• • • •

BEING no Joel Chandler Harris I will attempt no transcription of the soft-speaking of the Southern lady, with her mellow "ahs" for "I's," and her inimitably eliptical speech. Here, then, is a translation of her learned argument which, it seems, is not only against saying that Southerners say "you-all," but is also a defense of their saying it, if they wish to.

"Why, oh why," she wanted to know, "did you make that cliche crack at the South with 'you-all?' I hold no brief for Senator Black, I, too, think he is amusing—at times. But that 'you-all,' suh, is a crack at my section of the country, and I protest it.

"Except for such years as I have spent in New York City and other foreign climes, I have been in the South, and know most of its cities and rural co:.munities very well, indeed. And I have yet to hear any Southerner, cultured or otherwise, use 'you-all' except with plural intent This applies also to the Tennessee mountaineer, or what you would call the hillbilly, with his 'you uns' and 'we uns.'"

In the column which so stirred this Southern lady I had not signified whether Mr. Black's intent was plural or singular or just unintentional. But, come to think of it, he was talking just to one man when he said "you-all." Maybe he didn't mean to.

"John Masefield," she went on, "told me that the people he had met in America, who spoke English more nearly as it is spoken by the London literary set, were all Southerners. He elaborated upon this as including both construction and pronunciation."

• • • •

CULTURED Boston gentleman that I am, I let that insult to Brattle and Beacon streets pass by unchallenged, although it hurt! Mr. Masefield had told me the same thing one time when I had interviewed him, so there really wasn't much I could say.

"King Edward, in his radio speech," she went on, "said 'you all.' One of the news services commented upon it, intimating it was an Americanism. The commentator said the British were dumfounded. If the British noticed it at all, it is my guess that it was at the informality of not saying 'my subjects.'

"The fact that Mrs. Piers Leigh, the wife of one of Edward's favorite equerries when he was Prince of Wales, was born and reared in Nashville, Tenn., could not have been the entire responsibility for the past use of 'you all.'

"Did you ever spout Marc Antony's address over the dead body of Caesar in your extreme youth?"

We-uns hadn't, but nodded politely, nevertheless.

"Then you know that Shakespeare made Marc Antony say 'You all do know, etc.' And if Marc Antony could use 'you all' with telling effect, why not Edward VIII, and if Edward VIII, why not Senator Black, and they-all know they were using a good English term.'"

There seemed to be no answer to that. By now I was rather sorry I had aspersed the good Senator's speech, so I arose, and making a courtly bow, bade the lady adieu, and she swept out, leaving behind the scent of jasmine and the echo of her soft Southern voice.

The Once Over

The Streamline Home.

All house construction, as we know it today, will be obsolete in ten years, the fabricated home, air conditioned, electrically heated, etc., replacing it, say experts.

• • • •

The Home, Sweet Home of today will soon be as old-fashioned as a Model T flivver.

• • • •

Presently the builder of a new house will go to a showroom, inspect the latest models, place his order and have it delivered within a few days.

• • • •

And after a few years he will probably be able to turn in his last year's house for a new one and get a handsome allowance.

• • • •

"How are you getting on in your new bungalow?" the salesman will ask.

"Pretty fair," you will reply. "It's giving me very good service."

"But the lines are getting old-fashioned, don't you think?"

"I suppose it's not as smart looking as it might be. I'm thinking of bringing it in for a general overhauling and a paint job."

"Don't do that. Let us take it in as part payment for a new bungalow," the salesman will press. "Have you seen our 1945 line of bungalows, cabins, houses and palaces?"

"I saw some of the models in the folders."

"Drop in and look 'em over. We're turning out a two-family house this season that has built-in upholstery, concealed radio sets, streamlined plumbing, eight point suspension bathtubs, nonshatterable glass and a spare sun porch."

• • • •

"What about the instrument board?"

"It's located in your den and you can control everything in the house from the dash. It has electric heater thermostat, air conditioning dial, six-day clock, cigarette lighter, and hydraulic door openers."

• • • •

"That's great, but I can't afford a new house this season."

"Nonsense. You can get it for a small down payment. Let me give you a demonstration."

"Do you demonstrate new houses?"

"Positively. We'll set one up this afternoon and let you try it."

"Okay. And while you're at it you might bring up one of those new interchangeable garages!"

Spring.

Refreshed by recent rains the river flows
Its joyful course beneath the budded trees,
And once dead banks renew their stubbly slopes
With violets and gay anemones;
The pliant soil is eager for the plow,
The robin struts with confidential air,
And quickening of spring can now be felt
Around us and about us everywhere.
Reluctant sunshine finally fulfills
Her promise of returning daffodils.

Many railroad men are bewailing the recent Interstate Commerce Commission order cutting passenger rates to two cents a mile, but it is this department's belief that it will boost their business. Railroad fares have been so high compared with bus fares that the railroads have been practically driving business into the buses.

Elmer Twitchell thinks, however, that a two-cent per mile rate is arbitrary. "Some miles are worth two cents," says Elmer, "and some are not. "Through New England in spring two cents a mile is practically a cut rate, but there are other sections any season of the year when the miles you see from a coach window ain't worth a dime a gross."

Federal Employes Barred as Jurors

Pending a ruling by the United States Court of Appeals as to the legality of a recent act of Congress making valid the presence of Federal employes on District juries, Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue, in the District Supreme Court yesterday struck from the March panels all those who either held Government jobs or Government contracts.

A police court case, now pending in the Court of Appeals, is designed to test the right of Federal employes to sit in criminal cases and on the grand jury. In civil cases it has long been recognized that Government employes were legally qualified.

Most criminal cases tried in the Police Court and the District Supreme Court will not be affected by a ruling holding Federal employes disbarred from service. Only three cases, one involving a liquor ring, will be subject to the appellate decision, since in most instances defense attorneys did not avail themselves of the right to appeal because of the presence of Government employes.

Two Painters Hurt In Fall of Scaffold

Two house painters were injured seriously yesterday when a scaffold fell four floors to the pavement in the 200 block of Indiana avenue northwest.

Hampton Thompson, 28, who was at work on the scaffold when it plunged the 30 feet to the ground, suffered internal injuries. Earl Fertig, 40, his helper, who was standing below the scaffold at the time of the accident, may have a fractured back.

Both men were rushed to Emergency Hospital, where physicians said their condition was grave.

They were engaged in painting and decorating the four-story structure of the Acacia Life Insurance Building. Neither lost consciousness at the time of crash.

Frederic March Aids Cagney Contract Suit

Los Angeles, March 4 (AP).—Costumed as a French army officer, Frederic March testified today supporting James Cagney's contention that more than four pictures a year would injure his career.

March, appearing in Superior Court at the trial of Cagney's contract suit against Warner Brothers Studio, came directly from a film lot.

"I think that more than four pictures a year would be detrimental to Cagney's career," March testified.

Cagney is asking the court to abrogate his present $4,500 weekly contract with Warner Brothers on the ground he was required to appear in five pictures in one year.

Mrs. Nixon Divorce Service Is Upheld

Justice Jesse C. Adkins, in the District Supreme Court, upheld the legality of the service of divorce papers on Mrs. Anne Cooke Nixon, third wife of Capt. Thomas Hay Nixon, U. S. A., who had challenged the "process" because the papers, she said, were thrust into her lap with such force they flew out of the automobile in which she was sitting.

The papers, it was shown, were placed in Mrs. Nixon's lap by Harold T. Scott, who was especially appointed by the District Supreme Court to serve them. Mrs. Nixon said they went out of the window and were lost.

The third Mrs. Nixon, sister of Jane Cooke Scarlett, who only recently lost a suit to annul her marriage to George Stanton Scarlett 3d, married the distinguished Army officer after he had obtained a divorce from his second wife, Mrs. Annette Pauline Nixon, in Pennsylvania.

The communication said the Government had failed to specify whether the armament was preparation for "again throwing some millions of men across the seas" or "only one of defense against attack." Signers said "The country has a right to know."

Tax Committee Confers on New Revenue Fields

Asks Treasury Estimates of Additional Sources; Exemptions Asked.

fiscatory," he declared. "It is a direct penalty upon thrift, both as to corporations and individuals. It most effectively ends the so-called breathing spell the President has promised business, and is additional evidence, if any is needed, that the New Deal is making every effort possible to stifle private enterprise in this country."

Hill Indorses Feasibility.

While withholding any opinion on what the final form of the tax bill will be when the sub-committee study is completed in about a week, Chairman Hill declared the President's plan is "feasible, all right."

"The main argument for it is the justice of it— treating everybody alike, so everyone will pay taxes," Hill asserted.

But Hill admitted that several suggestions had been made in the sub-committee for modifying the Treasury's proposal that only the statutory depreciation and other exemptions be permitted corporations reached by the new earnings tax.

One plan, he revealed, would impose a lighter load of taxation upon, say, 15 or 20 per cent of a company's undivided surplus, which could be laid aside for reserves. He estimated that corporations now have reserves of less than 30 per cent, on an average. He said no plan has yet been proposed to allow any portion of total net earnings to go entirely tax free.

Regardless of the Treasury's failure to propose any class exemptions, the sub-committee is expected to exempt banks, insurance companies, and other fiduciary corporations.

Although no definite brackets have been worked out, the Treasury is said to have proposed that the 20 to 40 per cent tax range follow the lines of the present corporate income tax, which imposes a graduated scale on brackets ranging from up to $2,000, between $2,000 and $15,000, between $15,000 and $40,000, and over.

Argue Against Exemption.

In answer to the plea for exemption of earnings for reserve purposes, Treasury experts are said to have argued before the sub-committee that a corporation under the proposal could hold back not to exceed 50 per cent of its net earnings from dividends, and thus not pay any taxes higher than those now being paid. Taxes now being paid by corporations on the same money approximates 16 per cent, while the proposed taxes under the President's plan would average 33 1-3 per cent.

Treasury witnesses before the committee estimated that much of the $180,000,000 in impounded AAA taxes refunded to processors under the Supreme Court's rice millers' decision, and nearly $37,000,000 in unpaid processing taxes, could be recovered by means of the proposed "windfall" tax.

This, as outlined by the experts, is a proposal to classify, in a separate income class, taxes of this character, where the tax was imposed and passed on either to the producer or to the consumer. The sub-committee was told that a gross income tax applying to this category of taxes "might be constitutionally safe," Representative Hill said.

Under this plan, the processor would be required to report, in a separate statement, how much income he received from this source, and how much of it he had been able to pass on. If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue were not satisfied with the accuracy of the report, he could claim a deficiency, and seek to recover in the ordinary way.

In leaving the sub-committee, Representative Roy O. Woodruff (Republican), Michigan, observed that this plan is "liable to run into constitutional objections," but thought the tax "equitable and desirable if it could be done."

But Woodruff denounced the President's plan to tax undivided corporate profits as "dangerous to the future."

"It is an inducement to the stockholders to demand every penny of corporate income, when some reserves are desirable."

Representative Hill took the view that the new corporation tax might "do away with the inducement" for companies to reorganize and set up interlocking units, and should encourage simplification of corporate structures.

Attending the sub-committee conference were Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; Herman Oliphant, Treasury general counsel; Arthur Kent, acting counsel for the Internal Revenue Bureau; George C. Haas, C. E. Turney and A. S. McLeod, Treasury research and statistical experts; L. H. Parker, of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, and John O'Brien and Middleton Beaman, legislative counsel.

Meanwhile, urging retrenchment instead of additional taxation, Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, introduced in the House a resolution proposing to trim Government expenditures by $1,000,000,000 by consolidating Federal bureaus and curtailing operations of emergency agencies.

Joins Bacharach.

Knutson joined with Representative Isaac Bacharach (Republican), of New Jersey, in declaring the proposed corporate income tax would force corporations to go into the security markets and the banks for capital at interest, instead of drawing in the normal way upon their accumulated surplus.

Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican Congressional campaign committee, said the proposed "windfall" tax on impounded processing taxes was the "most astonishing thing in the President's message," and, in effect, proposed to raise revenue "by a tax on an unconstitutional tax."

Bolton said the New Deal had at last come to an "accounting" for its three-year "joy ride," but should meet "the issue of political squandering * * * with an honest tax program." He charged an effort to "smear" the Supreme Court by attributing losses in revenue to its recent decisions.

"The most disturbing aspect of the President's message is the evidence it offers of the Administration's determination to press its destructive assault upon the Supreme Court of the United States," he said.

"America will not be fooled by such shallow politics."

Corporate Tax Basis Assailed As Inaccurate

Estimate by Roosevelt of $4,500,000,000 for 1936 Challenged.

During that year, corporations paid out in the aggregate cash dividends of $3,127,459,000, and stock dividends of $102,043,000. These two totals are composed of corporation returns showing net income and of returns showing no net income.

The calculations of the students of the tax situation, due to the Treasury reluctance to release their estimates of total corporation income for 1936, on which the $4,500,000,000 figure was based, are necessarily founded on the President's budget message for the fiscal year 1936-37. In the message the President set the total expected corporation income tax collections to reach $826,600,000, exactly twice the 1933 collections noted above. The tax was collected on the sliding scale tax of from 12 to 15 per cent of total corporation.

To get a rough comparison figure of the President's estimate of corporation income for 1936-37 to align beside the 1933 figure of $2,985,972,000, his estimate of corporation income taxes was multiplied by seven times (using the 14 per cent tax figure in the sliding scale). This would show the total expected corporation income to be a little under $6,000,000,000 for 1936—by the President himself.

Since the tax figure in the budget estimate is twice the 1933 collection, it is fair to assume that the corporation income is expected to be roughly twice as much as in 1933, which would again check with the $6,000,000,000 figure.

In simpler words, the Administration has thus far estimated total corporation income for the next fiscal year to be about $6,000,000,000. Obviously, it is argued, corporations are not going to distribute as dividends to stockholders any sum less than distributed heretofore. The provisions of the proposed law suggested by the President make even greater distribution likely.

Yet in 1933 aggregate total dividends in cash alone to stockholders were over $3,000,000,000, while net income was not quite $3,000,000,000.

The President's message on taxes, however, states that the Treasury estimates for the coming year show that $4,500,000,000 of corporation income (nondistributed corporate earnings) will be withheld from stockholders during 1936. Therefore, in many quarters yesterday it was believed that the President's figure was vastly in excess of the probabilities and that any such figure for corporation total income during 1936 ranging around $7,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000, which would be necessary to justify the $4,500,000,000 sum, was exaggerated beyond plausibility.

2 Missing, 4 Hurt In Boat Explosion

Grand Tower, Ill., March 4 (AP).—Two men, probably blown into the water and killed, were missing after a boiler explosion that injured four others and wrecked the William G. Clyde, a towboat, on the Mississippi River here today.

Those missing were the boat's firemen, "Blackie" Price and Orville Beard. Escaping steam scalded four members of the crew, including the captain, John R. Trail. The pilot, O. E. Hines, was also reported injured.

The force of the blast hurled a barrel of blazing oil 100 yards to the Missouri shore and set brush afire on the bank.

Those at the Murphysboro Hospital, in addition to Capt. Trail, were William Holcomb and W. C. Greer, deckhands, and James Porter, a Negro waiter.

U. S. Bar Told Supreme Court Needs Curbing

Senator Minton Advocates 7 Justices Opinions to Invalidate Law.

A limitation on the power of the United States Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional so that seven of the nine justices must concur in an invalidating opinion was proposed last night by Senator Sherman Minton, of Indiana, in an address before the Federal Bar Association.

"It is dangerous," he said, "to place such great powers as now held by the Supreme Court in the hands of nine men who are so far removed from the source of all power—the people themselves."

His speech was made at a dinner in honor of William L. Ransom, president of the American Bar Association, in the Mayflower Hotel.

"Appeal to the Supreme Court is not a matter of right," he said. "When a litigant is granted the privilege of review by the Supreme Court it is under such regulations as Congress shall make.

"Congress can and should provide that when a litigant challenges an act of Congress on constitutional grounds, that he must convince seven of the justices that the act conflicts with the Constitution."

There is no specific grant in the Constitution of the power of the Supreme Court to invalidate an act of Congress, he said. "Had there been such a grant, I doubt that the Constitution would have been ratified."

"Ours is a Government of checks and balances. The court is a check on the Congress and the people, but who checks the Supreme Court?" he asked.

The court is only human, he added, and is subject to the same prejudices and predilections of the average human. Yet, five of nine men, he argued, can upset the judgment of the Congress and the President.

Mr. Ransom warned that local self-government is in "serious danger" and that its independence is being destroyed. Good government, he said, cannot be accomplished through reliance on any remote and bureaucratic centralization of power.

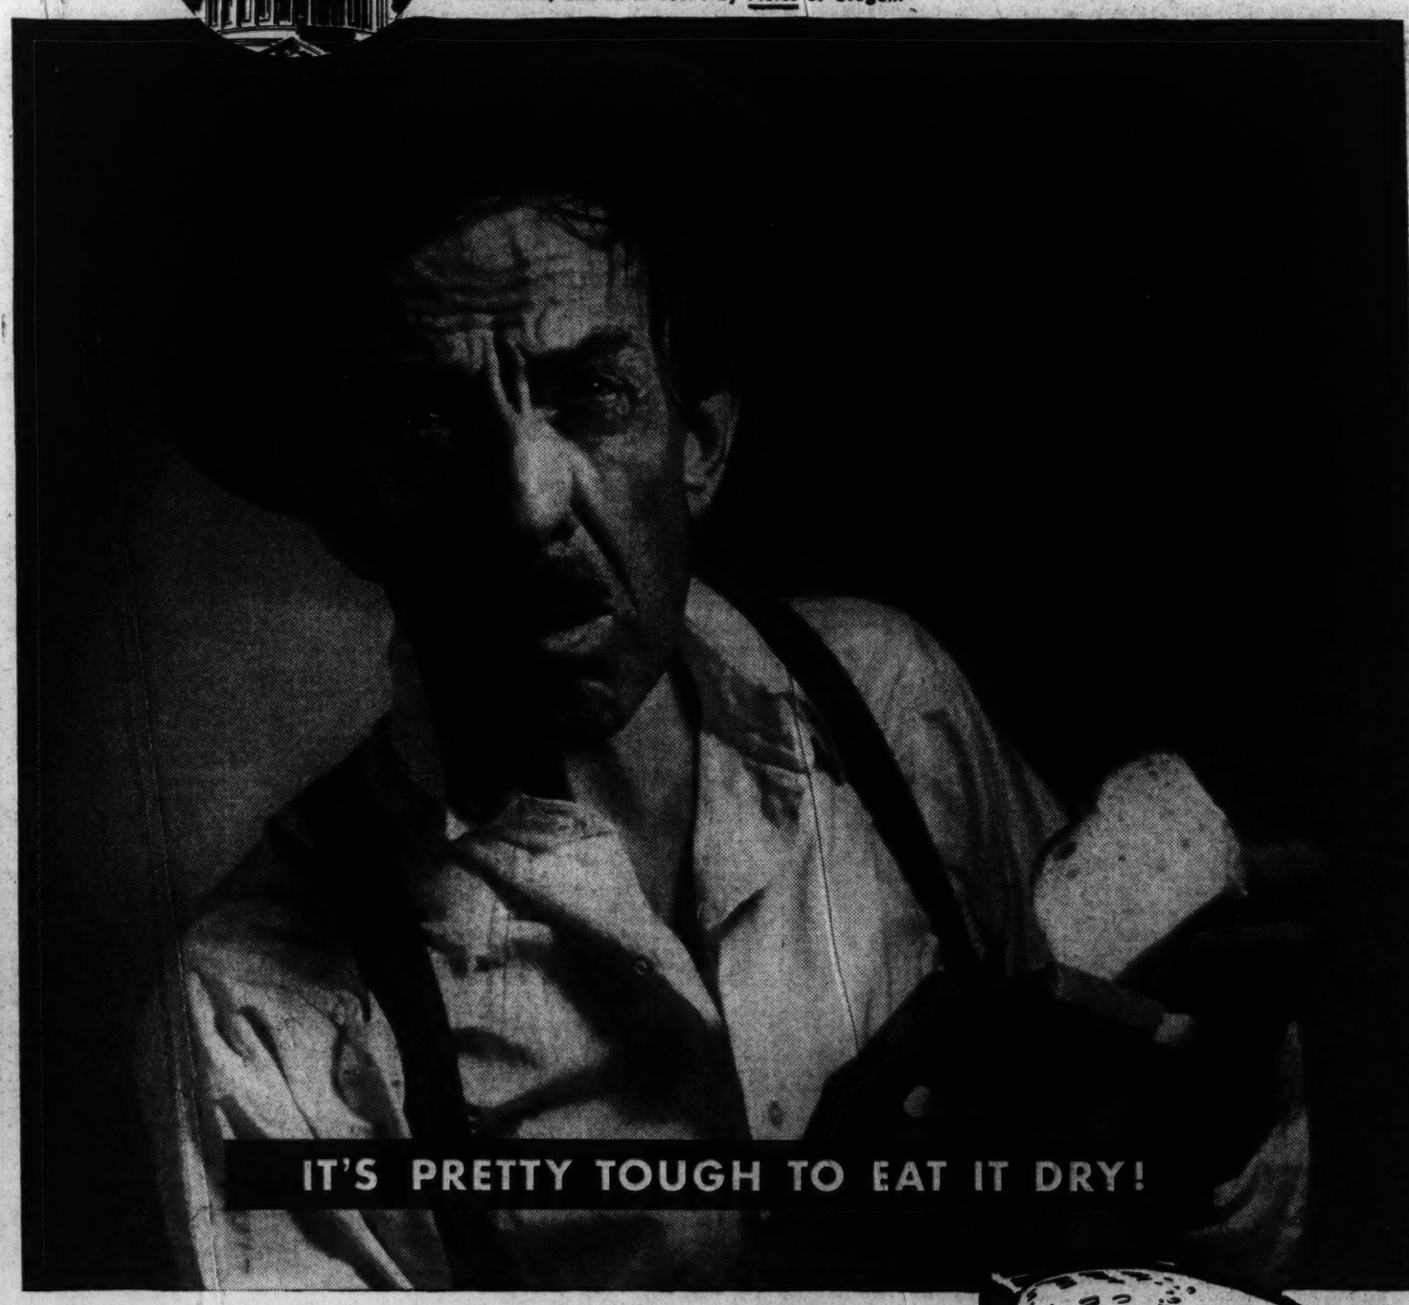
KILL THIS Tax

Selfish interests want Congress to put an additional tax of 5¢ to 10¢ on every pound of Margarine. These tax bills should be killed. They are H. R. 9672 by Culkin of New York, H. R. 9865 by Boileau of Wisconsin, and H. R. 10671 by Pierce of Oregon.



UNCLE SAM includes 45.6 pounds of butter in the rations of every soldier to keep him in fighting trim. A worker needs wholesome fats too, for energy. Dieticians put the minimum at 36 pounds per annum. Millions of workers with modest pay envelopes spread their bread with Margarine which they can buy at half the cost of butter. Made under Government supervision, from edible oils, fats, milk and salt, and containing exactly the same energy value as butter (3,500 calories to the pound) it is a wholesome food within their means. The proposed tax of 5¢ to 10¢ a pound on Margarine is not intended primarily to raise revenue —it is a punitive tax intended to increase the consumption and price of butter. It will hit the pocketbooks of those people who can least afford to foot the bill, by increasing the cost of a wholesome food necessity.

Tax Committee Confers on New Revenue Fields

Asks Treasury Estimates of Additional Sources; Exemptions Asked.

fiscatory," he declared. "It is a direct penalty upon thrift, both as to corporations and individuals. It most effectively ends the so-called breathing spell the President has promised business, and is additional evidence, if any is needed, that the New Deal is making every effort possible to stifle private enterprise in this country."

Hill Indorses Feasibility.

While withholding any opinion on what the final form of the tax bill will be when the sub-committee study is completed in about a week, Chairman Hill declared the President's plan is "feasible, all right."

"The main argument for it is the justice of it— treating everybody alike, so everyone will pay taxes," Hill asserted.

But Hill admitted that several suggestions had been made in the sub-committee for modifying the Treasury's proposal that only the statutory depreciation and other exemptions be permitted corporations reached by the new earnings tax.

One plan, he revealed, would impose a lighter load of taxation upon, say, 15 or 20 per cent of a company's undivided surplus, which could be laid aside for reserves. He estimated that corporations now have reserves of less than 30 per cent, on an average. He said no plan has yet been proposed to allow any portion of total net earnings to go entirely tax free.

Regardless of the Treasury's failure to propose any class exemptions, the sub-committee is expected to exempt banks, insurance companies, and other fiduciary corporations.

Although no definite brackets have been worked out, the Treasury is said to have proposed that the 20 to 40 per cent tax range follow the lines of the present corporate income tax, which imposes a graduated scale on brackets ranging from up to $2,000, between $2,000 and $15,000, between $15,000 and $40,000, and over.

Argue Against Exemption.

In answer to the plea for exemption of earnings for reserve purposes, Treasury experts are said to have argued before the sub-committee that a corporation under the proposal could hold back not to exceed 50 per cent of its net earnings from dividends, and thus not pay any taxes higher than those now being paid. Taxes now being paid by corporations on the same money approximates 16 per cent, while the proposed taxes under the President's plan would average 33 1-3 per cent.

Treasury witnesses before the committee estimated that much of the $180,000,000 in impounded AAA taxes refunded to processors under the Supreme Court's rice millers' decision, and nearly $37,000,000 in unpaid processing taxes, could be recovered by means of the proposed "windfall" tax.

This, as outlined by the experts, is a proposal to classify, in a separate income class, taxes of this character, where the tax was imposed and passed on either to the producer or to the consumer. The sub-committee was told that a gross income tax applying to this category of taxes "might be constitutionally safe," Representative Hill said.

Under this plan, the processor would be required to report, in a separate statement, how much income he received from this source, and how much of it he had been able to pass on. If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue were not satisfied with the accuracy of the report, he could claim a deficiency, and seek to recover in the ordinary way.

In leaving the sub-committee, Representative Roy O. Woodruff (Republican), Michigan, observed that this plan is "liable to run into constitutional objections," but thought the tax "equitable and desirable if it could be done."

But Woodruff denounced the President's plan to tax undivided corporate profits as "dangerous to the future."

"It is an inducement to the stockholders to demand every penny of corporate income, when some reserves are desirable."

Representative Hill took the view that the new corporation tax might "do away with the inducement" for companies to reorganize and set up interlocking units, and should encourage simplification of corporate structures.

Attending the sub-committee conference were Guy T. Helvering, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; Herman Oliphant, Treasury general counsel; Arthur Kent, acting counsel for the Internal Revenue Bureau; George C. Haas, C. E. Turney and A. S. McLeod, Treasury research and statistical experts; L. H. Parker, of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue, and John O'Brien and Middleton Beaman, legislative counsel.

Meanwhile, urging retrenchment instead of additional taxation, Representative Harold Knutson (Republican), Minnesota, introduced in the House a resolution proposing to trim Government expenditures by $1,000,000,000 by consolidating Federal bureaus and curtailing operations of emergency agencies.

Joins Bacharach.

Knutson joined with Representative Isaac Bacharach (Republican), of New Jersey, in declaring the proposed corporate income tax would force corporations to go into the security markets and the banks for capital at interest, instead of drawing in the normal way upon their accumulated surplus.

Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican Congressional campaign committee, said the proposed "windfall" tax on impounded processing taxes was the "most astonishing thing in the President's message," and, in effect, proposed to raise revenue "by a tax on an unconstitutional tax."

Bolton said the New Deal had at last come to an "accounting" for its three-year "joy ride," but should meet "the issue of political squandering * * * with an honest tax program." He charged an effort to "smear" the Supreme Court by attributing losses in revenue to its recent decisions.

"The most disturbing aspect of the President's message is the evidence it offers of the Administration's determination to press its destructive assault upon the Supreme Court of the United States," he said.

"America will not be fooled by such shallow politics."

Corporate Tax Basis Assailed As Inaccurate

Estimate by Roosevelt of $4,500,000,000 for 1936 Challenged.

During that year, corporations paid out in the aggregate cash dividends of $3,127,459,000, and stock dividends of $102,043,000. These two totals are composed of corporation returns showing net income and of returns showing no net income.

The calculations of the students of the tax situation, due to the Treasury reluctance to release their estimates of total corporation income for 1936, on which the $4,500,000,000 figure was based, are necessarily founded on the President's budget message for the fiscal year 1936-37. In the message the President set the total expected corporation income tax collections to reach $826,600,000, exactly twice the 1933 collections noted above. The tax was collected on the sliding scale tax of from 12 to 15 per cent of total corporation.

To get a rough comparison figure of the President's estimate of corporation income for 1936-37 to align beside the 1933 figure of $2,965,972,000, his estimate of corporation income taxes was multiplied by seven times (using the 14 per cent tax figure in the sliding scale). This would show the total expected corporation income to be a little under $6,000,000,000 for 1936—by the President himself.

Since the tax figure in the budget estimate is twice the 1933 collection, it is fair to assume that the corporation income is expected to be roughly twice as much as in 1933, which would again check with the $6,000,000,000 figure.

In simpler words, the Administration has thus far estimated total corporation income for the next fiscal year to be about $6,000,000,000. Obviously, it is argued, corporations are not going to distribute as dividends to stockholders any sum less than distributed heretofore. The provisions of the proposed law suggested by the President make even greater distribution likely.

Yet in 1933 aggregate total dividends in cash alone to stockholders were over $3,000,000,000, while net income was not quite $3,000,000,000.

The President's message on taxes, however, states that the Treasury estimates for the coming year show that $4,500,000,000 of corporation income (nondistributed corporate earnings) will be withheld from stockholders during 1936. Therefore, in many quarters yesterday it was believed that the President's figure was vastly in excess of the probabilities and that any such figure for corporation total income during 1936 ranging around $7,000,000,000 to $8,000,000,000, which would be necessary to justify the $4,500,000,000 sum, was exaggerated beyond plausibility.

Army Rifles Cover Policeman As He 'Tickets' Pay Car Driver

While Traffic Policeman L. E. Sikes calmly scribbled a speeding ticket, five armed men trained pistols and rifles on him, waiting only for a false move to open fire.

This tale out of a book was thrashed out and made more vivid yesterday when Everett A. Parker, driver of an automobile bearing a $13,000 pay roll for Fort Washington, appeared in Traffic Court yesterday for driving more than 22 miles an hour.

Capt. J. H. Judd, finance officer of the fort, testified before Judge John P. McMahon that he and four men were transporting the pay roll Tuesday when they were stopped by Sikes near St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Capt. Judd explained he was in Denver when the mint was held up there.

"You may recall, your Honor, that the holdup was staged by thugs dressed in police uniforms. We passed the policeman at a hospital gate and when he took out after us I thought he was pursuing some cars that had passed us.

"When the officer stopped us I was afraid it was another stickup. That officer was in a dangerous spot. He was covered all the time by rifles and if he had made a crooked move he would have been riddled."

Judge McMahon dismissed the case.

amuck, injure persons and property, and under the maximum penalty be fined $500, or be sent to jail for six months, or both.

He compared this with the motorist arrested for driving without a permit. This type of driver may be traveling at a moderate rate of speed, without endangering life or property, yet must face the same penalty as the hit-and-run driver, he declared.

Hazen Attacks Cars, Buses.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen was yesterday's first witness. He struck at infractions by street car and bus operators.

"I think we'll have to get after those birds and look them up," said Hazen.

He suggested three major needs for improvement of traffic conditions. These, he said, include further staggering of Government employes' hours; an increase in police personnel and a parking ban in the downtown area.

A traffic planning committee now investigating conditions for his office, Hazen declared, has recommended a five-year street widening program, redesigning of five circles and a limit to the number of taxicabs as suggested remedies.

Traffic accidents in the District, Hazen said, have brought more deaths than murder or homicide. He urged more uniformed policemen make the public "traffic conscious."

Incompetent drivers "who have no business on the streets" were blamed by Judge Schuldt for a major portion of Washington's accidents, injuries and deaths. He scored automobile manufacturers who advertise "how fast a car will go."

Schuldt Points to Speed.

"This tends to make the motorist want to find out just how fast he can go," said Judge Schuldt.

He said that speeding, failing to give the right of way and "stoplight" violations are responsible for a great number of accident cases brought into court.

Following yesterday's hearings, members of the sub-committee, accompanied by police and traffic officials, "went up in the air" over Washington's traffic. They observed rush-hour conditions from the Goodyear blimp.

The party included Representative Carpenter (Democrat), of Kansas, chairman of the sub-committee; Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana; Representative Reed (Democrat), of Missouri; Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown and Assistant Traffic Director M. O. Eldridge.

Your Face Changing, Says Anthropologist

When boyhood friends meet again late in life the remark "I remember your name but I can't seem to remember your face," would be perfectly justified, according to findings of Ales Hrdlicka, Smithsonian Institution anthropologist.

Dr. Hrdlicka, after measuring thousands of persons discovered that as age increases, side of the ears, nose and mouth also increases. He says the change in size is enough to alter facial appearance materially.

In actual measurements, Dr. Hrdlicka learned, women have smaller mouths than men. But mouths of women are larger in proportion to body height than the male mouth.

Boy Badly Burned By Gasoline Fire

A 9-year-old boy was seriously burned yesterday when his playmate, age 15, threw gasoline over him and then applied a lighted match, police said.

The boy, James ean, colored, of 613 L street northeast, was in Casualty Hospital last night in a serious condition, suffering from burns on the face, hands and body.

Police said he and the older, who is white, were playing together in a vacant lot on Sixth street northeast, between L and M streets. They found some gasoline near an abandoned auto. Police said the older boy threw the gasoline over James and over the auto and then set fire to both.

Police released the older boy in custody of his parents.

Nice Sales Tax Meets Setback In Upper House

Maryland Senate Committee Returns Unfavorable Report on Bill.

Annapolis, Md., March 4.—Forty-five minutes after starting their deliberations on the tax program as recommended by Gov. Harry W. Nice, the Senate finance committee voted unanimously to return an unfavorable report on the 1 per cent consumers' sales tax.

Earlier in the day, Gov. Nice had opened the special session of the Maryland General Assembly with his message, the high point of which called for the sales tax as the hub of the relief program recommended by the Casey committee.

The finance committee's vote was announced by Senator J. Allan Coad, chairman, who said that the formal report would be returned to the Senate tomorrow. Immediately thereafter, the committee went back to study the other eight measures suggested in the Casey committee's report.

"Some idea of the unpopularity of the measure was gained in the Senate.

A bill providing for the sales tax, drawn up by Attorney General Herbert O'Conor, was sent to the upper house from Gov. Nice's office. Senator Coad, the Democratic floor leader, was asked to introduce the bill. He vigorously refused, and then President G. Lansdale Sasscer asked Senator O. Straughn Lloyd, of Wicomico, newly elected Republican floor leader, to introduce the bill. He, too, declined.

Responsibility Dodged.

Nobody, it appeared, wanted to take responsibility for what was regarded as political dynamite. After the recess, however, Republican Leader Lloyd introduced the bill, saying he was doing so "by request."

In the House, however, the sales tax bill and other measures recommended by Gov. Nice in his message were introduced by Thomas L. Popp (Republican), of Allegany County, and occasioned no fireworks.

It is known that opposition to the sales tax is just as strong in the House as it is in the Senate.

The prospect is that the general sales tax bill will be defeated and the gross receipts tax extended to take care of the relief burden. The difference in the two plans is that under a general sales tax plan the consumer would pay a 1 per cent tax on every purchase over 10 cents. By the other, the merchant pays a 1 per cent tax on all sales after he has totaled them at the end of the month.

Gov. Nice's message today, said to be the shortest ever given by a Maryland chief executive and requiring 30 minutes to read, was in reality a digest of the report made by the Casey committee.

This committee, headed by William J. Casey, of Baltimore, was appointed by Gov. Nice to make a survey of the entire relief situation in the State with a view to developing a sound policy for dealing with the needy and the helpless.

Federal Grants Sought.

The highlights in the committee's report were a recommendation for a general sales tax and a recommendation that Maryland laws dealing with old-age pensions and unemployment relief be amended to conform with Federal laws, making it possible for Maryland to receive Federal grants.

In urging today's joint session to adopt these recommendations, Gov. Nice, in effect, asked that partisan politics be shelved.

"Never before in the history of Maryland," he said, "have we been confronted with so grave a problem, affecting the very existence of so many of our less fortunate men, women and children. This grave problem can only be solved by making our personal views subservient to the welfare of the entire State."

The present crisis, he said, was brought about by the action of the Federal Government in discontinuing its contributions for direct relief of the unemployed, and by the fact that the gross receipts tax, from which State relief funds are now derived, will expire March 31.

He said that the Works Progress Administration, which was to have absorbed all employables on relief, had not done so.

"There now remain throughout the State," he said, "16,773 cases requiring direct relief, involving the relief of over 75,000 persons, which indicates the present extent of this problem."

Politically, the convening of today's special session did not run true to form.

The Republicans in the Senate, in a surprise move, elected Senator Lloyd, of Wicomico, as floor leader, refusing to re-elect Senator J. David Baile, of Carroll County. This was regarded as a slap at Gov. Nice because Lloyd has several times criticized the executive, particularly in the matter of his appointments.

The Democrats re-elected Senator Sasscer as president without a dissenting vote, and other officers likewise.

In the House, all was serene. Kent R. Mulliken, of Laurel, Democratic floor leader, did not carry through his threatened "revolt" against Speaker Emanuel Gorfine, of Baltimore. On the contrary, he seconded the motion when Gorfine was nominated for another term, and, after Gorfine was elected, escorted him to the rostrum.

Speaker Gorfine announced that Thomas E. Sweeney, of Baltimore, was ill and could not serve on the rules committee. He named in Sweeney's place Willis A. Gassoway, of Howard County, a member here tomorrow night. More than 300 veterans are expected to attend.

In the Senate, Milton L. Veasy (Democrat), Worcester, introduced a bill providing $1-a-barrel tax on beer, the proceeds—estimated by him at $1,000,000—to be applied to old-age pensions. The same measure was defeated in the last session.

Grand Jury Asks 'Racket' Inquiry

Annapolis, Md., March 4 (AP).—The grand jury today recommended "an impartial investigation" be made of the alleged lottery racket in Baltimore be made by a new investigating body.

While calling for the "impartial" probe of the relation between the numbers racket and the police, the grand jury's report did not specify any particular body to make the investigation.

The recommendation was made following a visit to the grand jury by Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis and Judge Albert S. J. Owens of the supreme bench. Before filing the report, G. Robert Howell, assistant foreman of the jury, conferred with Judge Charles F. Stein.

The grand jury yesterday returned four presentments, charging 30 members of the police department with conspiracy in connection with numbers rackets in Baltimore.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c. Advt.

Nice Sales Tax Meets Setback In Upper House

Maryland Senate Committee Returns Unfavorable Report on Bill.

Annapolis, Md., March 4.—Forty-five minutes after starting their deliberations on the tax program as recommended by Gov. Harry W. Nice, the Senate finance committee voted unanimously to return an unfavorable report on the 1 per cent consumers' sales tax.

Earlier in the day, Gov. Nice had opened the special session of the Maryland General Assembly with his message, the high point of which called for the sales tax as the hub of the relief program recommended by the Casey committee.

The finance committee's vote was announced by Senator J. Allan Coad, chairman, who said that the formal report would be returned to the Senate tomorow. Immediately thereafter, the committee went back to study the other eight measures suggested in the Casey committee's report.

Some idea of the unpopularity of the measure was gained in the Senate.

A bill providing for the sales tax, drawn up by Attorney General Herbert O'Conor, was sent to the upper house from Gov. Nice's office. Senator Coad, the Democratic floor leader, was asked to introduce the bill. He vigorously refused, and then President G. Lansdale Sasscer asked Senator O. Straughn Lloyd, of Wicomic, newly elected Republican floor leader, to introduce the bill. He, too, declined.

Responsibility Dodged.

Nobody, it appeared, wanted to take responsibility for what was regarded as political dynamite. After the recess, however, Republican Leader Lloyd introduced the bill, saying he was doing so "by request."

In the House, however, the sales tax bill and other measures recommended by Gov. Nice in his message were introduced by Thomas L. Popp (Republican), of Allegany County, and occasioned no fireworks.

It is known that opposition to the sales tax is just as strong in the House as it is in the Senate.

The prospect is that the general sales tax bill will be defeated and the gross receipts tax extended to take care of the relief burden. The difference in the two plans is that under a general sales tax plan the consumer would pay a 1 per cent tax on every purchase over 10 cents. By the other, the merchant pays a 1 per cent tax on all sales after he has totaled them at the end of the month.

Gov. Nice's message today, said to be the shortest ever given by a Maryland chief executive and requiring 30 minutes to read, was in reality a digest of the report made by the Casey committee.

This committee, headed by William J. Casey, of Baltimore, was appointed by Gov. Nice to make a survey of the entire relief situation in the State with a view to developing a sound policy for dealing with the needy and the helpless.

Federal Grants Sought.

The highlights in the committee's report were a recommendation for a general sales tax and a recommendation that Maryland laws dealing with old-age pensions and unemployment relief be amended to conform with Federal laws, making it possible for Maryland to receive Federal grants.

In urging today's joint session to adopt these recommendations, Gov. Nice, in effect, asked that partisan politics be shelved.

"Never before in the history of Maryland," he said, "have we been confronted with so grave a problem, affecting the very existence of so many of our less fortunate men, women and children. This grave problem can only be solved by making our personal views subservient to the welfare of the entire State."

The present crisis, he said, was brought about by the action of the Federal Government in discontinuing its contributions for direct relief of the unemployed, and by the fact that the gross receipts tax, from which State relief funds are now derived, will expire March 31.

He said that the Works Progress Administration, which was to have absorbed all employables on relief, had not done so.

"There now remain throughout the State," he said, "18,773 cases requiring direct relief, involving the relief of over 75,000 persons, which indicates the present extent of this problem."

Politically, the convening of today's special session did not run true to form.

The Republicans in the Senate, in a surprise move, elected Senator Lloyd, of Wicomico, as floor leader, refusing to re-elect Senator J. David Baile, of Carroll County. This was regarded as a slap at Gov. Nice because Lloyd has several times criticized the executive, particularly in the matter of his appointments.

The Democrats re-elected Senator Sasscer as president without a dissenting vote, and other officers likewise.

In the House, all was serene. Kent R. Mulliken, of Laurel, Democratic floor leader, did not carry through his threatened "revolt" against Speaker Emanuel Gorfine, of Baltimore. On the contrary, he seconded the motion when Gorfine was nominated for another term, and, after Gorfine was elected, escorted him to the rostrum.

Speaker Gorfine announced that Thomas E. Sweeney, of Baltimore, was ill and could not serve on the rules committee. He named in Sweeney's place Willi. Gassoway, of Howard County, a member here tomorrow night. More than 300 veterans are expected to attend.

In the Senate, Milton L. Veasy (Democrat), Worcester, introduced a bill providing $1-a-barrel tax on beer, the proceeds—estimated by him at $1,000,000—to be applied to old-age pensions. The same measure was defeated in the last session.

Grand Jury Asks 'Racket' Inquiry

Annapolis, Md., March 4 (AP).—The grand jury today recommended "an impartial investigation" be made of the alleged lottery racket in Baltimore be made by a new investigating body.

While calling for the "impartial" probe of the relation between the numbers racket and the police, the grand jury's report did not specify any particular body to make the investigation.

The recommendation was made following a visit to the grand jury by Chief Judge Samuel K. Dennis and Judge Albert S. J. Owens of the supreme bench. Before filing the report, G. Robert Howell, assistant foreman of the jury, conferred with Judge Charles F. Stein.

The grand jury yesterday returned four presentments, charging 30 members of the police department with conspiracy in connection with numbers rackets in Baltimore.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c. Advt.

Cabinet Tenders Dinner To President, First Lady

Annual Function Held at the Mayflower; Several Other Guests Attend; Marine Band Furnishes Music.

By Francesca McKenney.

Last evening the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, accompanied by the usual secret service men and a police escort, were whisked to the Mayflower Hotel to attend the dinner given in their honor by the members of the Cabinet and their wives in celebration of the third anniversary of the President's inauguration. This function has been given each year since President Roosevelt took his oath of office and is one of the few dinners outside of the White House that the President attends.

The guests assembled in the Pan-American room of the Mayflower Hotel for a few minutes' chat before proceeding to the Chinese room where dinner was served. The table was beautifully decorated with pink roses and sprays of ferns strewn over the cloth. An entire gold dinner service was used with a Louis XVI gold centerpiece filled with flowers and fruit.

Other decorations on the table included a replica of the White House made of sugar, an open book also of sugar, showing the State coat of arms of the various members of the President's Cabinet, and small baskets tied with red, white and blue ribbon, also of spun sugar.

Marine Band Music.

A section of the United States Marine Band, in their scarlet coats, heavily trimmed with gold braid, were seated in the promenade just outside the Chinese room and played while dinner was being served. A section of the ballroom off from the Chinese room was transformed into a large drawing room, which was decorated with tall palms and ferns, with a raised platform at one side of the room.

Following coffee the guests wandered into the drawing room and Mr. Lawrence Tibbett took his place on the platform and sang a group of his favorite songs, accompanied by Mr. Stewart Wills at the piano.

The Vice President and Mrs. John Nance Garner, who were hosts at a dinner in honor of President and Mrs. Roosevelt early in the season, were among the guests last evening, as were the Speaker of the House and Mrs. Joseph W. Byrns.

Hosts and Guests.

Members of the Cabinet who were hosts to the Chief Executive and the First Lady were the Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Henry Morgenthau, jr., Mrs. Morgenthau being absent last evening due to mourning for her mother; the Secretary of War and Mrs. George H. Dern, the Attorney General and Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, the Postmaster General and Mrs. James A. Farley, Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy (the Secretary is recuperating from his recent illness), the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Harold L. Ickes; the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Frances Perkins.

Others who attended the dinner were the Assistant Secretary to the President and Mrs. Marvin H. McIntyre, the Assistant Secretary to the President and Mrs. Stephen Early, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, sr., parents of the Secretary of the Treasury, and house guests at the White House; Rear Admiral and Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Walker, Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett, Miss Marguerite LeHand, Mrs. James M. Helm, and Mrs. Malvina Thompson Scheider.

The President made an informal, reminiscent address last evening, which is his custom on this occasion.

Rain and Tears Have No Effect On Lash Stain

Harmless New Preparation Is Smudgeproof and Lasts for Weeks.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

THERE ARE embarrasing moments such as shedding piteous tears and having your mascara dribble pathetically down your cheeks. Or such as braving a rain storm only to have your painted lashes smear and run. Or inadvertently rubbing your eye with the unsightly result of a black smudge when your mascara is the undependable kind.

In order to avoid such embarrassing moments as these many women are turning to a new preparation which is neither a mascara nor a dye. It might almost be called a stain for here's what it does: You apply it by means of a small brush. If you are a blonde, you use the brown; if you are a brunette, the black. And then your troubles are over. Those lashes are darkened for the next four to six weeks. Darkened so that there's no danger of smears, runs and whatnot. And best of all, safely darkened. The preparation is definitely harmless. And the price of it? Only $1.

Candelabra for $1.95.

FOR THAT hall table, the top of the bookcase in the den, the mantelpiece in the living room, the center of the dining room table—or buffet—what could be lovelier than one of the etched Chinese brass candelabra with seven stems?

By the time the seven candles are lighted you have a soft, glowing light, especially nice for late suppers or dinners.

It's amazing to find that this lovely piece costs only $1.95.

Spring Brings Garden Urge.

NOW THAT spring is tantalizingly close, most of us feel the urge to garden. And, if not to garden, at least to plant things and watch them grow. Maybe that's one of the reasons the ivy bowls in a downtown store are going like wildfire.

They're the loveliest things! Round glass globes—clear-colored—set in wrought-iron frames which the ivy can cling to and grow around. These artistic articles sell for two modest sums—59 cents and 50 cents.

Petticoat Dress Appears.

IT'S IMPOSSIBLE not to look demure, coy, and perhaps a bit coquettish in the irrestible Margot petticoat dresses shown in Washington for the first time today in a local shop.

They've everything it takes to give you a fragile, feminine look. They have wasp waists, high necks with dainty little white collars, built up shoulders, full sleeves tight below the elbow, full skirts—and guess what? Taffeta petticoats with ruffle after ruffle around the bottom. It's the petticoat that gives a luxurious rustle, and a fetching hang to the skirt.

The dresses, in size 11 to 17, come in navy blue with petticoats in green or red.

And lest you think that petticoat frocks are some flippant fad, don't forget they were sponsored first of all by Schiaparelli and Mainbocher.

Versatile Rolling Pins.

WHO WOULD ever think that rolling pins were endowed with such varsatility? Well somebody did and it's to him we're indebted for one of the most fetching canape or hors d'oeuvre gadgets on the market.

Drop by a certain G street shop and see it. A rolling pin, punched all over with tiny holes. Into these fit colored (or plain) toothpicks bearing your cheese, sausages, olives, onions, pickles or what not.

For the bride's shower, wouldn't this be a clever item? Or for a bridge prize or birthday remembrance. Wouldn't you just adore one for yourself? And why not? The price is only $1.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 323, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

SOME PEOPLE have a knack about doing things themselves . . . others aren't a bit handy with needles or nails. If you happen to be one of the gifted ones in household puttering, you'll probably let yourself in for a lot of extra work . . . on the other hand, you'll have a prettier house than you might be able to afford if you had to hire everything done. For instance, here's a situation of a lady who wants most of her redecorating check to go on purchases . . . so she plans to do as much of the work herself as possible, even to re-covering the chairs. She has a carved walnut two-in-one table which is rather heavy—this for the living-dining room. She wonders whether some carved end tables and a coffee table could be used with this. If so, what type of odd chairs should she get that can also be used for dining? What over-stuffed furniture coverings should she get . . . what draperies, lamps, pottery, etc. She has only one decided preference as to replacements—that is for a burgundy broadloom rug.

We would have the walls tinted in pale pink to go with the burgundy broadloom rug . . . then cover the sofa in turquoise, one chair in gray with small flowers in a brocaded pattern, one chair in solid gray. Lamps and accessories we'd have in silver finish and pottery in turquoise.

AFTER YOU MEET MUNA LEE, you never again ask the question, "Can a successful homemaker also have a successful career?" What this writer has done, and is doing, makes you wonder, rather, just how many jobs one woman can negotiate at a time.

The wife of Luis Munoz-Marin, Puerto Rican senator at large and noted journalist, Miss Lee is a poet, feminist, fiction writer, translator and director of the bureau of international relations at the University of Puerto Rico.

"Yes, all this keeps me busy," she said yesterday, "and there are my son and daughter who come in for their share of my time; but I love having a lot to do."

HOPE RIDINGS MILLER.

Brings Manuscript.

Miss Lee (Mrs. Luis Munoz-Marin) recently came to the United States to bring the manuscript of a book, "Modern Haiti," edited by her and Richard Pattee (also of the University of Puerto Rico). She arrived in Washington Monday to attend the stunt part of the Women's National Press Club and will remain here a few days before she return to Puerto Rico.

A poised, self-assured yet unassuming woman with big brown eyes, dark hair and a low, soft voice, Miss Lee has a keen sense of humor and an extensive background of experience from which to draw her observations.

Yesterday she discussed subjects ranging from feminism to fiction writing and from poetry to Puerto Rico.

In connection with the latter she mentioned a visit to "The States" is most enjoyable, "but the ideal place to live is Puerto Rico. I believe all people are divided into two classes—the continentals and the islanders," she went on. "I'm just naturally an islander, although I was born in Mississippi."

International Interest.

Since international relationships have long been one of her chief interests, she finds her work at the university particularly fascinating.

Formerly on the National Women's Party committee on international action, Miss Lee has been closely identified with the woman's movement both here and on her "adopted island." She reports Puerto Rican women, who still think of "rights" in the terms of suffrage, have been taking their place in public life in increasing numbers ever since they were granted the vote. Yet less than a decade ago, when Miss Lee spoke before the sixth Pan-American Conference, she was the first woman ever invited to address that group on rights for women.

Miss Lee said poetry was much easier for her than prose. She agrees with the opinion of Victor Hugo, "Writing a poem is easy—if possible." She says she enjoys verse making because it is the only thing in the world one does just because one wants to. "When you turn out a poem, you don't expect any money or fame from it. It is its own reward."

Believes in Struggle.

She believes a long, hard struggle at first is part of most any writer's career. "Some, of course, seem to get to the top easily and quickly; but I wonder if, in the long run, they are as fortunate as those who arrive later. A stiff apprenticeship is necessary in almost any line of important work, and the firmer the foundation the better the structure."

As she talks on in her soft, even voice, you feel the force of this poet-philosopher's rich personality in everything she says. You regret the interview must be closed so quickly, when there are so many things you still want Muna Lee to discuss. She hasn't yet had time to tell you about how she writes fiction, why she became interested in doing translations from Spanish to English, and later veered off to doing mystery stories; how she came to write her slim volume of verse, "Sea Change," published a dozen years ago; or how she looks after her son and daughter and still keeps so many irons in the literary fire. There is time for only one question.

"Is Muna called MEW-na or MOO-na, Miss Lee?" you ask.

A soft smile curves her lips. "It depends on where you live," she replies. "In Puerto Rico they call me MOO-nah; but my mother named me MEW-nah, so that's how it's generally pronounced here."

Paris Designers Show Novel Spring Ideas

Paris (U.P.).—Sleeves shaped like tennis rackets, trousered evening dresses, rustling petticoats and hats or dresses trimmed with vegetables are a few of the crazy innovations of Paris couturiers this season who, having lost much British trade because of King George's death, are making frenzied attempts to catch American buyers.

The spring and summer collections, in which imagination has run riot, are a mixture of inspirations and influences with kaleidoscopic results. Some showings go Chinese, others Spanish, Russian and even Ethiopian—contrasting oddly with classic Grecian lines featured in the more conservative salons.

Your Health

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Few of us quite understand the extreme delicacy of lung tissue. Its gossamerelike texture lends to inflammation readily. If each one of us could view a tiny portion of the lung under a microscope we would see the thin walled aff sacs through which run fine capillaries. It is in these areas that oxygen is absorbed by the blood. We could then better understand just how and why disease can gain a foothold so quickly.

We are in the pneumonia season, and many cases of this unfriendly invader will occur unless we take care of colds promptly. If there is a season of the year when we should protect the reserves of the body it is now. Bacteria—those that attack the nasal passages, the throat, the bronchi, and the lungs—grow luxuriantly in tired tissues; they rejoice at the opportunity of holding high carnival in human bodies weakened by chilling temperatures.

Not Fatal Disease.

We must understand that pneumonia is not necessarily a fatal disease, as the great majority of patients will recover under good medical management and nursing. There are, however, complications that sometimes prolong illness, sap the strength of the patient, and increase the hazard. One such is termed empyema and is characterized by the gathering of pus in the pleural space.

In order that we may understand just what occurs we should recall that the lungs lie within a double walled sack called the pleura. No air is found between the two layers, hence the lungs can expand readily when the chest wall rises. If we wish to collapse the lung—as is done frequently in the treatment of tuberculosis—air is admitted to the pleural space. The lung will not again expand until the air has been absorbed.

Pus can form in the pleura whenever infection extends from the lungs or reaches this area via the blood. The complication may follow influenza or injury, but is more frequently associated with pneumonia.

Drainage Necessary.

As with any collection of pus in the body, drainage must be secured. This is often accomplished by employing a hollow needle, although it may be necessary in some instances to remove a small portion of one or more ribs. The more complete the drainage the more prompt the recovery. The necessary surgical procedures are often carried out with the patient in bed, without recourse to elaborate operating room paraphernalia. If a hollow needle is used the abscess can rarely be emptied completely, and fluid or pus may reaccumulate. This means that repeated withdrawals may be required.

TWO ON SAFARI

By GEORGE AGNEW CHAMBERLAIN

Ballard Mallory, young American explorer, accepts a commission to find the young Hon. Laurence Morland, who has disappeared in Africa. Aboard ship he meets Josephine Cascoden, enigmatic young Englishwoman, who calmly announces she is going with him. He tries to prevent her, their wills clash, but she outwits him. At last, he agrees and, at the hotel in Lourenco Marques, provides equipment for her which she tells Mrs. Semster, the housekeeper, she will not wear. She finally accepts his choice and they prepare for the journey into the jungle.

"Find Mr. Mallory!"

Chapter XIV.

THE next instant she was hurrying along the hall, asking her way from whomever she happened to encounter. She reached the entrance just as Ballard was about to step into an arriving taxi.

"Wait for me, please."

He turned quickly to face her. "What did I tell you I'd do if you ever disobeyed an order?"

"Nonsense," said Josephine, pushing by him and stepping into the car. "A fine fool I'd look if you told me to stand still—and then went away for a month!"

"Oh, that's it, is it?" he exclaimed with an understanding smile. "You think I'm a double-crosser."

By this time he should have grown accustomed to having his smiles go unanswered, but it still gave him a shock to have them collide with a wall of gravity. She seized on this moment to explode a small bomb.

"Aren't you?" she asked.

"Me? You know I'm not."

Her gaze did not waver. "I'm not quite sure what double-crossed stands for in American, but I think I know—and I hope you are."

He stared at her, a slow flush mounting to his cheeks. "What do you mean by that?"

She sank back in the deep seat of the tonneau of the open car and smiled, not at him but to herself, a smile like a slammed door. "I thought you were in a hurry," she remarked.

"I am," said Ballard sternly, "and you'll only be in the way."

Her dark eyes peered at him from beneath the steep rim of her helmet. "I'm sorry."

"You insist on going along?" She nodded. He sprang in across her extended legs and sat down beside her. "All right; since you think you can take it, I'll give you the chance."

City of Strange Sights.

A black frown on his forehead, he barked an order in Portuguese, and they were off. The car hurtled into town and drew up at the door of the Standard Bank, where he sprang out and was gone for nearly half an hour. The high sun denied her shade, but she did not mind, so interested was she in the strange sights which met her eye.

Foreigners and Portuguese in white; banians in diaphanous robes, close-fitting jackets and embroidered skullcaps; silent Swahilis, white-gowned and wearing red fezzes. Everywhere Kaffirs in various stages of undress, their bronze torsos glistening under an even layer of sweat. Street venders bearing trays of fruit or sweetmeats, pausing to tempt her and staying to gaze, whether out of admiration or merely from wonder she could not know. A blonde barmaid, hatless and looking very fresh in blue and white dimity, left no doubt as to her appreciation.

"Hello, sweet," she called over her shoulder.

"Hello," said Josephine, giving her look for look.

At that instant Mallory issued from the bank and almost collided with the passing girl. She threw out both hands in greeting.

"Darling! Who dropped you in my lap?"

"Cut it, Nellie," said Ballard with a laugh. "I'm in a rush." He set her gently aside and made for the car.

"No wonder!" called the girl, her cry overleaping the rasp of the gears.

Five minutes later they drew up in front of glaring white walls pierced by wide doors and half a dozen dusty windows. Again Ballard disappeared, and Josephine waited patiently, but soon the sun began to get in its work.

She left the car and slipped into the shade within one of the doors. For a moment she was blinded by the sudden darkness, but as soon as her pupils had dilated she perceived it was not darkness at all. She gazed along counters and behind them at the most amazing variety of goods she had ever beheld. At sight of her, three clerks abandoned their customers, stepped forward and asked her what she wished.

"Nothing," said Josephine, embarrassed, and then added to justify her presence, "I'm with Mr. Mallory."

They Visit the Warehouse.

"Mr. Mallory?" said the nearest of the clerks. "He's in the warehouse. This way, Miss, follow me."

She obeyed reluctantly and emerged into a vast shed, two sides of which formed a pier. A large square had been cleared for Mallory's convenience and was humming with activity. One Chinese carpenter was engaged in making oblong boxes while another fitted them with hinges, hasps and locks. At one side a Swahili in charge of three blacks was setting up a tent and furnishing it complete. For a moment Josephine wondered what had become of Mallory. Then she discovered him in the center of the turmoil, stripped to the waist, his bare feet thrust into rope sandals, he was passing from heap to heap and with a pencil alternately slicing the sweat from the back of his neck and checking off items on a voluminous list. Occasionally he made an extra notation in the margin and barked out some supplementary order.

"Everything else all right, sir?" asked a clerk who seemed to be the only cool person present.

"No," said Ballard. "Throw out that collapsible table. Give me a deal one instead, turn it upside down and get an honest-to-God tin bathtub that will fit between its legs."

As he turned he undoubtedly caught sight of Josephine, but his glance passed her by as if she did not exist to fall upon the Chinese carpenters. "Line two of them with zinc, John, might as well make it the first two."

"Yes, Boss."

For two long hours Josephine watched him and his helpers. He did none of the actual work himself, but evidently was under a greater strain than anybody else. No detail escaped him and at the most trifling error his voice, usually so controlled, took on a sharpness which was as injurious as the cut of a whip.

It was well past 2 o'clock when he took a handful of clean waste from a keg, swabbed his arms and shoulders, slipped on his dolman, put on helmet and shoes, and promptly became transformed into his dapper self.

"Eat?" he asked.

"I should say so," said Josephine, faint with hunger.

He took her to one of the kiosks in the central square paved in mosaic. It was as strange an edifice as she had ever seen, with a stalk like a mushroom surmounted by a cupola and broad verandas. They climbed through the stem and chose the coolest of the four corners. He ordered curried prawns with rice.

Samples a New Dish.

"I'd rather have something cold, please," said Josephine. "Just a salad."

"No salad," said Ballard, "It's a funny thing about curry—the hotter the day, the hotter the curry, the better it goes."

She obeyed, and after the first mouthful realized he was right; she felt as though she could empty the dish herself. "It's great!" she admitted, and added, "What's that you're putting on?"

"Bombay duck," he explained, continuing the crumble the dried fish over his own plate. "Put some on one corner and see if you like it. Don't miss the chutney. Here, let me help you."

She ended by eating a huge lunch. With coffee she had a cigarette and was on the verge of turning friendly when he sprang to his feet.

"Must you go?" she asked with a touch of sarcasm.

Her first approach to humor startled him, but he acknowledged it only by a curious glance. "Yes," he said. "I'm going, but you may do as you please."

She rose and followed, accompanied him while he made call after call on officials, on the all powerful head of the W. N. L. A., at the licensing bureau and the steamship agency. Late in the afternoon the car drew up before a building in the main square and Ballard disappeared up a cool flight of stairs. She waited and waited. At last she spoke to the driver.

"Do you understand English?" He shook his head in denial. She remembered that the word hotel was the same in most languages. "Hotel," she said, waving her hand, and repeated wearily, "Hotel, hotel!" Evidently he understood, but he shook his head again and pointed with his chin up the stairs. At that moment she recognized an approaching Swahili as having been in attendance on Mallory. Her ears had already taught her that boy is a generic term for all servants in Africa.

"Boy!" she called.

All drew near. "Yes, Missis."

"Do you understand English?"

Ali drew near. "Yes, Missis."

well," he declared with a grin.

"Find Mr. Mallory," she ordered. "Tell him I want to go home."

Stripes Take Stage for Spring

Bright Colors Are Heralding Spring Days

Conservation Disappears as Contrasting Shades Riot in Wardrobe.

BRIGHT COLORS are heralding the spring. It has been many a season since conservatism was tossed so emphatically out of the window and women have turned without restraint to a vivid array of contrasting and blending shades.

In the accompanying photograph you see Ann Harding in a stunning sports ensemble which owes part of its chic to its cleverly combined colors.

The tailored frock and seven-eighths coat are made of pale yellow wool, very sheer in weight. A second sheer woolen widely striped with pale roses, green and white is used to line the coat and form the shawl, which is tied in front in a flat bow. The sleeves are turned back to form deep cuffs of the striped fabric. An off-the-face sports hat of pale yellow felt, yellow leather handbag, chamois gloves and shoes of brown and chamois color are worn with the suit. The ensemble was designed by Bernard Newman.

Many of the spring ensembles which are catching the feminine shopper's eye are even more gypsy in their color scheme. An attractive suit shown in a recent fashion parade was a soft brick shade. The buttons down the front were chartreuse, and the scarf chartreuse and citron. The hat worn with the frock was brick color trimmed in lacquered feathers of chartreuse, blue, citron and orange.

In almost all instances this season dresses of a solid color are brightened by vivid collars and cuffs, bunches of spring flowers or Schiaparelli's glossy vegetable bunches. Hats are high-lighted with flowers, fruits, vegetables and veils as colorful as butterfly wings.

Diplomats' Wives Learn of Tasty Dishes; Mrs. Bliss Gives Fruit Recipe.

By Pattie Ellicott.

AMERICAN diplomats, when occupying posts in various sections of the world, acquire a liking for the native foods of those lands. Their culinary experience also widens.

MRS. BLISS.

In South America our diplomats learn new and novel uses for fruit. These recipes are cherished especially by the women of diplomatic households who know not only the other members of the particular foreign colony will rejoice in a new way to utilize a particular article of food.

When Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss was in South America at the time her husband was United States Ambassador to Argentina, she found delightful changes in her menus made possible by the most generous use of fruit so abundant in that tropical realm. Among those recipes was one for stuffed preserved oranges, which frequently she has used in her Washington home, Dumbarton Oaks, in old Georgetown.

The recipe is as follows:

Stuffed Preserved Oranges.

Oranges, raisins, candied cherries and candied pineapple are ingredients to be used in making this delectable dish. The first step is to wipe the oranges, making three holes through each orange at right angles to one another, using a pencil-shaped vegetable cutter. Stuff with fruit, filling center first. Cover with boiling water and boil 20 minutes. Drain, cover with water, and repeat three times. Strain, cover with a syrup made of two parts sugar to one part water and cook to 220 degrees Fahrenheit. Let stand until cold. Again bring to boiling point and cook to 220 degrees Fahrenheit. Cool and repeat until skin is tender enough to pierce with toothpick. Bring to boiling point. These oranges may be put into sterilized jars and sealed.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have met the most wonderful man. I met him just six weeks ago and we love each other very much. We are planning on being married some time this summer. His mother lives in New York City and he has written to her, telling her we plan to be married. She wants to give him an engagement ring for me, and wants me to write her a letter telling her that I really love her son. I just don't know what kind of a letter to write her. He has told me how nice she is and he's sure she will like me. Will you kindly tell me just what I should say to her? I'm supposed to mail the letter next week. Thanking you in advance, I am, ANXIOUS.

• • • •

Older Woman Should Launch Exchange of Letters.

DEAR ANXIOUS: If a letter of the sort suggested is to be written at all, it seems to me it should be written from the writer's heart and not according to any set rules laid down by another. It is my belief the mother is not so much interested in having a written affirmation of your love for her son as she is in having a letter by which to judge your social, cultural and mental qualifications.

• • • •

Also, I am inclined to think your future mother-in-law should take the initiative in setting in motion an exchange of correspondence with her future daughter-in-law. When an affianced pair announce their happy state to their respective parents, it is good manners for the young man's parents to call upon the young lady's parents. Where this is not physically possible, I should say the young man's mother could well write to the young lady's mother and to the young lady herself. After all, a personal letter is closely parallel to a social call.

• • • •

However, if you feel you must write this letter, make it brief, simply worded and sincere. You might say Tom, or Jim, or Henry (or whatever your fiance's given name is) has asked you to write to her and that you hope she is prepared to like you as much as you expect to love her; that Tom has told you what a wonderful person she is and that you know it must be so, since she has such a wonderful son. You might say you are looking forward to meeting her at the earliest possible date, because you have so much to talk over with her.

• • • •

I think it would be more tactful to avoid any specific reference to your engagement, or to your love for your fiance. She knows about the one; the other is taken for granted; and make no mention of the anticipated engagement ring. For the time being, that is a matter which rests between mother and son. You may sign yourself "Affectionately, Mary Blank"; or "Affectionately yours, Mary Blank," or, simply, "Mary," and place your address on the left-hand side of the note paper, the space of a line or two below your signature. M. H.

Correspondent Asks Name of Good Plastic Surgeon.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: As the first step toward my eventual happier outlook on life and ability to face the world eye to eye, will you please give me the name of a reputable plastic surgeon in Washington, and tell me the approximate cost of a plastic surgery operation? My need is for someone to reshape the contour of my nose, and, I imagine, to graft on skin to conceal disfiguring scars left by a severe and prolonged case of acne. Thanking you for your courtesy in this matter, I am, sincerely, ANONYMOUS.

Cards Waste Time, Mrs. Catt Declares

Women Who Play Bridge Scored by Leader.

Women who "waste their time playing bridge are guilty of a crime against society, in the belief of Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, leader of women's activities for half a century.

Mrs. Catt recently told the women's division of the American Jewish Congress that women with any leisure on their hands should use it in the fight to maintain individual liberties against the onslaught of dictatorships.

A criticism of nations for lack of action in the face of Nazi abuses brought Mrs. Catt to her attack on bridge players.

"You women who waste your time playing bridge," she said, "let me warn you that you are committing a sin against society. Give your time, give your all to the greatest contest that has ever come before the world. Arise and be heronies while yet there is time."

Laughing Girl Gains Strength; Heart Watched

Operation for Pelvic Ailment Believed Only Hope by Doctors.

By the United Press.

Weston, W. Va., March 4.—Teresa Hawkins, 18, who is slowly laughing herself to death, gained strength tonight, and physicians stood guard at her bedside, ready to operate.

Dr. J. E. Offner believes an operation to relieve a pelvic ailment is the only chance of halting the girl's wild laughter, which is weakening her heart muscles.

Teresa's nervous system is causing her to laugh, Offner said. She is irrational most of the time, but today she spoke. When she was urged to continue talking, Teresa said: "It's too much trouble." Then she lapsed into laughter.

The strange ailment first showed itself when she was attending a comedy at a Fairmont motion picture house. Two girls took her home. Teresa was taken to Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, where physicians said they could do nothing for her.

When she was brought back, Offner said: "I believe the causes for the attack have been latent in the girl's system a year or more. Exceptionally heavy school work or some other mental exertion is likely to have brought on the laughing."

Hysteria or Nerves Blamed.

New York, March 4 (U.P.).—Fits of laughter can be caused either by hysteria or disturbance of the central nervous system, Dr. Iago Galdston, of the New York Academy of Medicine, said tonight.

Explaining he was not attempting to diagnose Teresa Hawkins' ailment at long distance, Galdston said:

"If it is a case of a disturbed central nervous system, then it is not laughter as we know it—the reaction to humor. It is then simulated laughter caused by spasmodic disturbances of the diaphragm and various muscles."

Airport Conferees Seek Accord Today

Another conference will be called today of Senate and House conferees on this District airport commission bill in an effort to iron out "minor differences" in the compromise plan approved last week.

One of the differences is understood to be over whether the Federal or the District governments should furnish the $100,000 appropriation to finance the site commission. Of this amount, $10,000 is to be used to employ technical advice, and $90,000 would be available to obtain an option on any site selected by the commission for recommendation to Cangress.

Chairman Mary T. Norton of the House District Committee, expressed the belief that the District should not be taxed with expense until it is determined whether the airport is to be national or local in character.

Treasury Bond Offer Overbid Seven Times

Same Heavy Demand for 5-Year Notes Reported by Morgenthau.

By the Associated Press.

Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday that the Treasury's $1,250,000,000 March borrowing was oversubscribed from five to seven times.

He said reports already received indicated cash offering of bonds would run well over seven times the $650,000,000 asked. Subscriptions for the notes, of which $600,000,000 were offered, were well over five times that amount.

The bonds have a maturity of 12 to 15 years, and pay interest at the rate of 2¾ per cent. The notes have a maturity of five years, and pay 1½ per cent.

Subscription books on the offering were opened last Monday and closed the same day.

Books will close Thursday night on the offer to exchange either the bonds or notes for $559,000,000 of 2⅞ per cent notes maturing April 15.

Judge Upholds Paper Service On Oil Magnate

Doherty Attorneys Argued Gridiron 'Crasher' Was Improperly Chosen.

Relying on an 83-year-old rule of the District Supreme Court, Justice Jesse C. Adkins yesterday declared the service of papers in 14 civil suits on Henry L. Doherty, while he was attending the Gridiron Club dinner December 14, was valid.

Attorneys representing Doherty had sought to quash the service of the suits on the theory Gerald W. Sickler, George Washington University student who "crashed" the gate to serve the oil tycoon, had been improperly appointed to serve the papers. Justice Adkins failed to agree with this contention.

Sickler was appointed to serve the papers Newmyer & Bress said they had been unable to obtain service on Mr. Doherty through the marshal's office. Dressed in formal evening clothes, Sickler walked by the guardians of the gates at the dinner, strode up to Mr. Doherty, and after ascertaining his identity, handed him the papers.

Eyewitnesses said the two conversed freely for several minutes, after which Sickler, his duty performed, left the hall, bearing with him the distinction of being the first, at least publicly, to crash the dinner. Afterward he was quoted as saying he was sorry he did not stay and enjoy the proceedings.

Big things have happened

Visible COLD

The controls of the 1936 Kelvinator keep food compartment temperatures ideal, regardless of how hot it is in the kitchen. And you can see what the temperature is, because a Built-In Thermometer tells you that food is being kept surely, safely, dependably cold.

Visible ECONOMY

Today, for the first time in the history of the industry, Kelvinator provides you with a Certificate of Low Cost of Operation. The 1936 Kelvinator uses one-half or one-third as much current as many refrigerators now in use. This saving alone may justify replacing your old refrigerator.

Visible PROTECTION

You may know today, beyond a shadow of doubt, that the refrigerator you buy will give you long years of service. Because the 1936 Kelvinator is backed by a 5-year Protection Plan, written and signed by the oldest company in the electric refrigeration industry.

since you or your friends bought refrigerators

In every city and town in America—in clubs and homes and on the streets—people are talking about Kelvinator—the new refrigerator.

Those who have put off buying any electric refrigerator—who have waited for new developments—new improvements—have found in the 1936 Kelvinator the answer to every question that a conservative buyer could ask.

Owners of automatic refrigerators are replacing them with new Kelvinators, not because the old ones are worn out, but because new developments, new discoveries, new inventions now offered for the first time have, by comparison, made former refrigerators obsolete, wasteful, inefficient, and old-fashioned.

The 1936 Kelvinator gives you Visible Cold. It maintains low temperatures in the food compartment to a new and amazing point of accuracy. And, for the first time, a Built-In Thermometer tells you in unmistakable figures how cold it is. You know that food is being properly preserved, that health is properly protected.

It gives you Visible Economy. In comparison with the new Kelvinator, many refrigerators formerly judged as economical now must be considered inefficient, and wasteful of electric current, for Kelvinator uses a half or even a third as much current as many refrigerators now in use. And there can be no doubt about economy because every Kelvinator is sold with a Certificate of Low Cost of Operation.

And it gives you Visible Protection. Every Kelvinator is backed by a 5-year Protection Plan signed by the oldest company in the electric refrigeration business.

The 1936 Kelvinator gives a new meaning to the word "convenience." There are flexible rubber grids in every ice tray, automatic defrosting switch, sliding shelves in the food compartment, interior light, food crisper, utility basket—everything to lessen the burden and brighten the work of housekeeping.

If you are one of the 7 million owners of automatic refrigerators, or if you have not yet bought, get all the facts about this revolutionary new refrigerator, and learn how easily you can own one by means of our liberal Deferred Payment Plan.

Heath Needs Plea Is Denied Dr. Ruhland

Blanton Committee Find Health Officeer Pays $16.69 for Waterfl

Transcript of Testimony as Expurgated Leaves Reader Confused.

With health items trimmed deeply by the Bureau of the Budget, the 1937 District budget is now receiving Congressional consideration. The Washington Post desires that this city have the best health department in the Nation. This is one of a series of articles designed to show Congress the District's health needs.

By Gerald G. Gross.

The District Appropriations subcommittee was interested to learn that Health Officer George C. Ruhland pays $16.69 annual water rent, but it did not give him a chance to outline properly his public health program for 1936-37, examination o fthe expurgated transcript of the hearings reveals.

In effect, $23,800 was chopped from the Budget Bureau estimates for the Health department without Dr. Ruhland's receiving an opportunity to describe his needs adequately.

Ruhland Interrogation.

"We will take up the Health Department," said Sub-committee Chairman Thomas L. Blanton, opening the interrogation of Dr. Ruhland. The taking up may be illustrated by the following excerpt:

Dr. Ruhland—You have built up a splendid educational system that Washington should be proud of, but for at least the last ten years, and possibly longer, the personnel in physicians and nurses to look after the health supervision of those children has not been adequate. You have 14 physicians to make the health supervision of these 99,000 school children, and you have had just 12 nurses to assist them in that work.

Mr. Blanton—Do you know of any city in the United States with 500,000 people that has more than the 1200 parks that Washington has big or little!

Dr. Ruhland—No; I do not.

Mr. Blanton—Do you know of any city in the United States with 500000 people that has a greater number of playgrounds than Washington has?

Dr. Ruhland—No; I do not.

Mr. Blanton—That goes for health, does it not, parks and playgrounds? Outdoor playgrounds go for health, do they not?

Dr. Ruhland—Quite so, but the Health Service, as we speak of it, in a more restricted sense, visualizes other services for the protection of public health.

And that is how school medical inspection, one of the most important activities in the public health establishment, was disposed of.

Claims by Ditter.

The transcript also discloses how Blanton's Republican colleague on the sub-committee, Representative Ditter, attempted to dismiss by rationalization the fact that the city hospitals are filled beyond capacity, hundreds of tuberculosis sufferers are permitted to spread their disease because of bed shortage, and that venereal and other communicable afflictions are rampant.

Since Washington has few factories, and the Army and Navy hospitalizes its own (but not in all cases), local hospital facilities should not be overtaxed, Ditter reasoned with Dr. Ruhland. He did not, however, attempt to refute statistics showing that, no matter how lucky the inhabitants of Washington may be, the death rate here from tuberculosis is second highest in the land.

Much was made by committee members of the presence of Walter Reed, Naval and Mount Alto hospitals.

The Federal hospitals have their own medical staffs. The city hospitals are manned, with the exception of one resident each and his assistants, by visiting staffs, composed of private practitioners who donate their services, it was pointed out by a doctor who preferred to keep his identity a secret. He further said the physicians and surgeons of the Capital, who are donating gratis an estimated $1,000,000 in services each year, are the same ones whom Blanton assailed at the public health mass meeting February 16 as chislers and parasites.

On the day following the mass meeting, at which Blanton challenged the doctors to a fist fight, one at a time, Dr. Charles B. Campbell appeared before the sub-committee as chairman of the health committee, Federation of Citizens' Associations.

No sooner was he introduced as a "doctor," Blanton shouted that he would not hear a word from "these damn doctors" and the health chairman departed forthwith. The expurgated transcript does not mention this incident, however.

Record of Episode.

"Statesments of ..... and Dr. Charles B. Campbell, chairman, health committee,' 'is how the introduction to this part of the hearing reads.

But the aftergoing does not even mention the name of the "witness." The episode occurred about here:

Mr. Lodge (president of the Citizens Federation). I wanted to go from there to the health and hospital items. I think that the matter has been presented by petitions, and, unless there are questions, I am perfectly willing to stand on the petitions which have been sent in.

Mr. Blanton. Were you at that doctor's mass meeting in Central High School yesterday, Mr. Llewellyn?

Mr. Llewllyn. No, I was not.

Mr. Blanto. Are you a doctor?

Mr. Lodge. No, sir.

Mr. Blanton. We will hear you. We have heard from all of the doctors who have asked to come.

More 'World Spirit' Necessary, Says Dean

Prof. Raymond Moley, left; Dean V. C. Gildersleeve, of Barnard College, center, and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, trustee of the college, at a dinner last night at Mrs. Meyer's home in honor of Miss Gildersleeve's twenty-fifth anniversary as dean.

Miss V. C. Gildersleeve Makes Peace Appeal at Dinner.

Dean V. C. Gildersleeve, of Barnard College, last night attacked "super-patriots" and "100 per cent Americans" in a plea for a proper combination of real patriotism and what she termed "world spirit" to remedy the ills of mankind.

She addressed 63 graduates of Barnard from Baltimore, Annapolis and Washington at a dinner in honor of her twenty-fifth anniversary as dean at the home of Mrs. Eugene Meyer, a trustee of the college.

Preceding her as a speaker was Prof. Raymond Moley, former Brain Truster and for twelve years head of the government department of Barnard. He predicted women would play an equal role with men in the politics of the future.

Miss Gildersleeve, in a talk entitled "Citizens of the World,' said that the most important difference she found between the college girl of 25 years ago and the one of today was the personal responsibility felt by the latter for bettering the world.

Moved to Desperation.

She said their desire to do something about this feelnig sometimes led to excesses which should not be criticized too much because they have been brought up to feel that way, and college offered them very little besides a condemnation of war.

"I have been very much moved at times by their desperation," she added. "'We must do something—anything—to stop the world from slipping, slipping, slipping into the abyss!' So they cry."

She expressed disapproval of the so-called "Oxford Pledge" and anti-war strikes, except the latter, she thought, sometimes stimulated lethargic students to think about world problems.

"One great difficulty in our pathway," she said, "is the talk of and the conception of peace. Peace is a poor word and a poor goal. It is a negative conception, it is not a state to appeal to the gallant spirit of youth. Moreover, it is, as a subject for discussion, the most controversial and embittering topic I know.

"Somehow, we must give more effectively to our young people something to do about it all. We must try to provide more outlets for their generous and passionate desire to help mankind. We must suggest to them causes for which, if need be, they feel willing to die."

Praised by Mrs. Meyer in her introduction for not neglecting Barnard during his political career, Prof. Moley said:

"The Democratic party is better because of the telling criticism that Mrs. Meyer has recently offered, and I hope that it can likewise be said that the Republican party may be brought to a deeper sense of the realities in the coming campaign because of what some of us on the side of the Democrats have done in criticizing its past policies."

Attacks of "Philistines."

He referred to Mrs. Meyer's recent debate in the Town Hall in New York with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Defending the position of professors in politics against attacks of the "Philistines," he said the Republicans had recently acquired the services of a Yale professor.

"There is no essential difference between a Republican research bureau and a Democratic brain trust," he said.

Of Dean Gildersleeve, he said: "In the 25 years of her service at Barnard, that institution has grown into a fine example of what modern higher education can be in the life of a great city and a great nation."

Among those present, besides the Barnard alumnae, were Miss Mabel Turner, principal of the National Cathedral School for Girls; Mrs. Frederick A. Holton, principal of the Holton Arms School; Mrs. David Wing, principal of Miss Madeira's School, and Mrs. Geoffrey K. Brackett, principal of Miss Catherine's School in Richmond.

Sunday Liquor Bill Rejected By House Body

District Committee Fears Plan Would Aid Dry Cause Here.

The House District Committee, which has shelved the Guyer prohibition bill, yesterday rejected the Dirksen bill to permit Sunday liquor sales on the ground it would give ammunition to the drys.

The committee at the same time voted to report for the second time the Ellenbogen rent-control bill and a measure which abolishes the last fee office in the District, that of steam boiler inspector, and substitutes a salaried position.

Under prodding by committee members, Representative Palmisano (Democrat), Maryland, promised to hold hearings on the long-delayed anti-gambling bill aimed at the numbers racket, but he fixed no date.

Explaining the attitude of the majority of the committee on the Dirksen bill, Chairman Mary T. Norton said:

"Everybody knows that I want to be as liberal as possible in administering the liquor law, but we must consider the effet this bill would have on the Guyer bill to dry up the District."

Representative Brewster (Republican), Maine, expressed the view passage of the bill would "surely bring back prohibition."

Dirksen explained he had introduced the bill upon request and would not contest the will of the majority.

Although the rent commission bill, carrying minor amendments, is again on the House calendar, there is no assurance that it will be called up this session.

Internes, Nurses Merit Exemption Asked in Bill

A bill to exempt internes and student nurses employed in District and Federal hospitals from the compensation schedules fixed by the Civil Service act was introduced in the Senate yesterday by Chairman Bulow of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

The measure provides that the Civil Service Commission may fix the compensation of these employes without regard to the schedules in the 1927 act.

Spelling Bee Winner.

Ora E. Haines, of the Patent Office, emerged victor in a spelling bee held by the Capital City Spelling Club at its regular monthly meeting in Mount Pleasant Library last night. Haines won by successfully spelling the word "Lachesis" after his last surviving opponent had misspelled it "Lakesis."

Board Assails Cuts in Fund For Teachers

$89,000 For Hiring 30 More Instructors Is Taken Out.

Relieving of Congestion Held Most Pressing School Need.

Elimination from the pending appropriation bill of funds for additional teachers to relieve congested school classes was sharply criticized yesterday by Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou and the Board of Education at yesterday's meeting of the board.

"The question of reducing the size of these classes is the most pressing need of the school system," declared both Dr. Ballou and Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, president of the board.

Dr. Ballou pointed out that the sub-committee on appropriations not only cut out a specific request for $36,600 for this purpose, but prevented officials from using an unexpended balance of $53,000 for the immediate hiring of 30 additional teachers.

"We estimated that next year we would be able to save $46,000 through appointments of teachers at the minimum of the grade," Ballou continued. "However, instead of allowing us to use that sum for dadltional teachers the sub-committee cut the appropriation by just that sum.

"This money we spend is money obtained from the residents of the District," Robert A. Maurer, a board member, interposed. "I don't see why we should be treated as if we were trying to steal money from the Federal Government."

Fuel Allowance Cut.

The need of additional teachers has been stressed repeatedly by parent groups throughout the District, it was pointed out.

Dr. Ballou also pointed out that the sub-committee cut of $25,000 from the Budget Bureau's allowance for fuel, light and power, reducing the figure to last year's level, despite that a deficiency appropriation of $60,000 will be necessary for this year.

The board approved this request for supplementary funds, also requests for an additional $4,000 for the transportation of crippled and physically handicapped children after May 12, and $700 for postage costs.

Suggestions for relieving the school building needs for junior high and vocational school students in the next lve years were outlined by Dr. Ballou in the tenth and eleventh of his series of reports on the proposed five-year school building program now being drawn up.

He estimated that by 1942 additional accommodations would have to be provided for 7,549 white and 2,054 colored students in the junior highs.

No estimate was made of the increased enrollment in vocational schools to replace tee Abbot and Lenox Vocational schools; erection of a new school for girls at Arkansas avenue and Allison street northwest to replace the Dennison School; and an eight-room addition to the Margaret Murray Washington School for girls.

Ballou's Suggetsions.

Ballou's suggestions for relieving the junior high school building needs in specific areas follow:

For the area west of Rock Creek Park where are estimated 1,963 additional students would have to be accomodated by 1942, erection of a second wing at the Alice Deal Junior High to accomodate 300; and purchase of two new sites, one near Massachusetts avenue and Macomb street for a 1,100-pupil school, the second for an extensive building for 625 children in the Cleveland Park area.

For the area between Rock Creek Park and Soldiers Home, with 2,653 additional students; purchase of a site near 19th and Columbia road for a 1,200-pupil school; purchase of a site for a school of the same size near Kansas avenue and Gallatin street; and purchase of land at the Powell Junior High for physical training purposes.

For Northeast Washington along Rhode Island avenue, with 784 additional children; construction of two wings at the Taft Junior High, increasing the school's capacity by 600 pupils.

For Southwest Washington, where the enrollment is expected to remain fairly the Jefferson Junior High School, for static; completion of the replacement of which funds have already been appropriated.

For East Washington west of Anacostia River, with 1,864 additional pupils: erection of a second wing to the Eliot Junior High for 300 pupils; and construction of a new school near the Wheatley School for 1,200 students.

For East Washington, east of the Anacostia River, with 285 additional students: purchase of a site for either a junior or senior high school in Anacostia; and erection of a junior or senior high school in a second site for 600 to 800 pupils.

For Colored Junior Highs.

Ballou's recommendations for the colored junior high schools were:

For Browne Junior High, 206 additional students: The opening of the new addition this month is expected to fill this need.

For Francis Junior High School, 415 additional students: An addition to the school to accommodate roughly 400 children.

For the central Washington distric, $79 additional students: Transfer of the Douglass-Simmons Elementary School for the use of the Terrell Junior High School and the construction of a connecting corridor bteween th two schools; construction of additional lavatories on ecah floor of the Terrell school; purchase of land near the Terrell school for physical training purposes; purchase of a site near Sherman avenue south of Columbia road for a junior high; and improvements in the Shaw Junior High.

Both reports were referred to the board's finance committee for discussion at its meeting Friday afternon.

The board approved Ballou's recommendations for meeting high school needs for the next five years, and the reorganization of the night schols for the latter part of this term.

Central High School will be closed down March 12, the pupils being transferred to Roosevelt and McKinley Night High Schools. Briggs, Burrville, Francis, Lovejoy and Randall schools will be closed March 19, while Garnett-Patterson pupils wil lbe transferred to Cardozo. In all 1,395 students are affected.

The board also approved the appointment of six additional members to the Community Center council, Col. Charles I. eGorge H. Collingswood, George P. Barse, Mrs. Emma McL Castell, George W. Beasley and Maj. Campbell Johnson.

Jenckes' Fire On Red Rider Is Challenged

Hearings Resume Mon- Hearings Will Reesume Monday; Foes to Have

Board of Education Has 9 Letters Protesting Enactment.

Hearings on the Sisson bill to repeal the "anti-red" rider that forbids the mention of communism in local schools, will be resumed Monday at the House Office Building before the sub-committee on education of the House District Committee, it was announced yesterday by Representative Ambrose J. Kennedy, chairman.

Opponents of the bill will be heard and members of the Board of Education are expected to be permitted to refute the blanket accusations of "inefficiency" and "betrayal of a public trust," hurled at them by Representative Virginia Jenckes, a member of the subcommittee, last Monday.

Jenckes' Brief Awaited.

Mrs. Jenckes' statements were challenged by Mrs. Marion Wade Doyle, president of the board; Representatives Fred J. Sisson, author of the bill, and Henry Ellenbogen. Mrs. Jenckes, however, was excused from being questioned by pleading illness. She promised to file "a factual brief" amplifying her charges before the close of the week.

Representative Sisson is also expected to testify. His testimony, it was indicated yesterday, will be aimed, in part, at the 270-odd pages of testimony on the red rider and "communism in the schools" contained in the transcript on the hearings of the sub-committee on appropriations headed by Representative Thomas L. Banton.

That Blanton intends to use the appropriations hearing transcript as a defense for the red rider was made plain yesterday by his mailing letletters to all Congressmen urging them to "please get a copy of the hearings," as they will "convince you there has been a national effort to communize not only the schools of Washington, but also the schools of the United States."

Letters Urge Repeal.

At yesterday's meeting of the Board of Education, nine letters from parents and citizens' organizations advocating repeal of the rider were read. They were from the Washington Newspaper Guild, the North Capitol Citizens Association, the Professional Directors of Religious Education of the District, the Parent Education Lay Leader Group, the Jackson School Parent-Teacher Association, the executive board of the Bancroft School Parent-Teacher Association, the MacFarland Junior High School Parent-Teacher Association, the Citizens Association of Chevy Chase, Horace Browning, local real estate man.

A letter from Mrs. E. M. Zachiarias, who identified herself as "a property owner, taxpayer and mother of two sons," was read protesting against the teaching of communism in the schools "in any shape or form."

U. S. Heading for War, Family Group Is Told

Association Hears Rep. O'Day; Dr. Perkins Is Named President.

America is "headed for another war," Representative Caroline O'Day (Democrat), New York, last night warned the Family Service Association.

After her speech Dr. Frederic W. Perkins, pastor of the Universalist National Memorial Church, was elected association president.

Other officers chosen: Woodson Houghton, vice president; Norman E. Towson, treasurer; Col. H. O. Atwood, Coleman Jennings, C. C. Morgan, Mrs. E. K. Morris, Miss Lucy D. Slowe, Miss Florence Spofford, Dr. Anson Phelps Stokes, Evan H. Tucker, Floyd Crosby, David Finley, Mrs. Wilfred Goodwin and William Hirt Hill, board members.

Mrs. O'Day devoted most of her speech to a discussion of social problems. When she turned to comment on the war outlook she spoke with marked emphasis and emotion.

"It seems to me," she said, "we are headed for another war. I ask you to do everything in your power to make Congress and the Administration realize we are opposed to war and won't have it."

The speaker's appeal drew prolonged applause. In describing the current period as an industrial age, she deplored the tendency to relegate to "the scrap heap" men and women over 45, 50 or 60.

"Many families," she said, "are haunted by the fear of insecurity. Their desire for security transcends all of their other hopes. They want a roof over their heads, enough to eat, a reasonable amount of leisure and freedom from the fear of old-age dependency.

"They certainly should receive such security in a land of unbounded resources."

She outlined the long-distance goals of the Administration's social security program. She insisted, however, there always will be a need for private agencies such as the Family Service Association.

Dr. Stokes and William H. Savin, association director, told of the desire of the organization to aid the financially distressed to earn their own living.

'White Collar Workers' Will Hold Open Forum

Meeting at the Capital City Forum, 1502 Fourteenth street northwest, tomorrow at 8:15 p. m., "white-collar workers'" will hold a symposium. The program will be the fourth of a series sponsored by the forum on "The State of the Union."

Speakers will be E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employes; John Donovan, president of the NRA Lodge of the A. F. G. E.; Edward J. Tracy and Robert Buck, president of the Washington Newspaper Guild.

Prisoner Leaps From Window; Back Is Broken

Negro Suspect in Roundup Lands on Skylight in Three-Story Fall.

John Leonard Grimes, colored, 26, of Alexandria, Va., a prisoner arrested Saturday night in the bandit roundup by police in the Second Precinct, leaped from a third-floor window at police headquarters yesterday He is suffering a fractured back.

Police said Grimes had confessed as having been one of the men who robbed Sergius Carmen, a liquor store proprietor in the 1300 block Seventh street January 31, and was being questioned in connection with the murder of a customer during a holdup in a grocery on Ninth street northwest over a week ago.

Detective Sergt. Walter E. Beck, of the homicide squad, had taken the man to a washroom on the third floor. As Beck opened the door, Grimes dashed to the window and dived head first through the glass pane. He fell about 50 feet, landing on a skilight covering the furnace room.

Sergt. Beck grabbed Grimes' foot just as it was disappearing over the sill. He yelled for help and another colored man working on the second floor tried to catch Grimes as he slipped from Beck's grasp.

Grimes was taken to Gallinger Hospital in the fire rescue squad's ambulance. His condition was said to be serious.

The Negro was identified Tuesday night in a line-up as one of the "lunch hour" bandits who staged two daring daylight robberies resulting in the death of one man.

House Gets Leave Bill.

Chairman Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee yesterday submitted to the House conference agreements on the two Government leave bills and expects to ask for their acceptance today. After the House acts, the conference reports will go to the Senate, where they may be approved tomorrow.

Citizens Unit Plans to Fight Funds Slash

Friendship Association Is to Send Delegation to Congress.

Backs Sisson Bill; RacingMeasure Is Opposed at Meeting.

Angered by the House Appropriation Committees slash in the Federal contribution to the District, the Friendship Citizens Association last night decided to send a delegation to appear beore the Senate committee to demand the old 60-40 fiscal relations law.

If the delegation is unable to get this, it was instructed to ask a lump-sum contribution for the District, which, in no case, should be less than $5,700,000.

The association also threw its weight behind the Sisson bill to repeal the antired rider prohibiting the teaching of communism in the District schools. To make doubly sure that the present red rider would be disposed of, it also indorsed Sisson's original amendment to the rider allowing the teaching of the facts of communism.

Disapproves Racing Bill.

The associaton expressed its disapproval of the bill to legalize horse racing in the District and the new Juvenile Court bill. It went on record as favoring the two small-loan bills and a bill to regulate the practice of pharmacy here.

It apposed the proposed plan to change the local zoning regulatoins insofar as it might restrict the voice o fthe people involved.

Crime Drive Indorsed.

The Association of Oldest Inhabitants, holding their regular monthly meeting at Old Union Engine House last night indorsed Maj. Ernest Brown's recent crime drive and adopted a resolution commending his efforts.

Mrs. Jesse C. Adkins, the guest speaker, recommended the District to adopt a system of juvenile courts which would place youthful lawbreakers in chancery instead of in criminal courts, raise the juvenile court age limit from 17 to 18, and call for thorough social investigation of delinquent cases.

A bill providing for such juvenile legislation in the District has been referred to the House District Committee. The Oldest Inhabitants gave the bill their approval and will recommend it to the Congressional District Committees.

A resuest that the Oldest Inhabitants support a movement to secure an armory for the United States Naval and Marine Reserve Corps was indorsed. Two new members, A. Leftwich Sinclair and Henry W. Selah, were elected to he association.

John Roosevelt, Son of President, Makes Hasty Pudding Stage Debut This Month

Will Be Here With Harvard Troupe Mar. 29

Will Be Star of Ensemble; National Is Relighted; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Although this column usually devotes itself to the strictly professional theater, its stars, plays and activities, there has come to hand a letter of such immediate interest to the Capital that I feel it should be reproduced in its entirety.

The letterhead is that of "Hasty Pudding—Institute 1770," 12 Holyoke street, Cambridge, Mass. The date is March 3, 1936.

The letter:

Dear Mr. Bell—As publicity manager for the Hasty Pudding Show this year I'm taking the liberty of sending you some material which may be of interest in in view of the fact that we play Washington the night of Sunday, March 29.

I've enclosed a release from which you can get all the facts that you may require. However, I've heard that names make news so here goes.

John Roosevelt, the President's youngest son, will be in the chorus and will sing and dance in any routines the chorus may have to do. It will mark his first appearance on any stage and, in view of the fact that this is his first year out for the show, it was agreed that he would not be featured in any way but would merely be one of the "ensemble" as it's sometimes called.

He has a good singing voice and although his 6 feet 4 inches of height give him a little trouble in the dance routine he is quickly shaping up as well as any one else in the show. He will be one of the "men" and his "female" partner will be George F. Baker, jr., grandson of the famous financier.

Other "names" in the show are Marshall Field, jr., of Chicago; Gasper G. Bacon, jr., son of the Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts; William Morris Hunt, grandson of the famous American architect; John LeFarge, grandson of the poet-artist, and Francis Lee Higginson Wendell, of Chicago. The only other Washingtonian besides Johnny is myself.

I hope that this will be of some use to you. If I can help you in any way please don't fail to let me know. We'd appreciate very much having you come to the performance and if you found you could do so, let me know and I'll shoot you down some tickets.

(Signed) BENJAMIN WELLES 2d.

I commit myself at once, Mr. Welles. I shall review your show, so shoot those tickets any time it is convenient, or inconvenient—just so I get them!

Although it is probably an utterly forlorn hope that the New York producers ever will catch our point of view, it is the confirmed determination of this department to keep whanging away on the outworn topic of Washington's being a two-week booking for certain attractions in the living theater that never do either themselves or the National Capital justice by limiting their engagements to a single, seven-day period.

When Katharine Cornell sells out the house practically before she even arrives in town—a habit of hers that is of national scope and application—when Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne come along and do the same thing; when "Dodworth," "Pride and Prejudice" and others of the hits that go into New York and run interminably begin their careers on the boards of the National Theater and attract potential audiences that a single week can not possibly accommodate, the capacity of Washingtons only so-called "legitimate" theater being what it is, why is it that the presumably superior intelligences sitting at their Broadway desks can not detect signs of prosperity that they do not encounter in any other city in the country, the size of ours?

Show business is supposed to be strictly commercial. No doubt it is. It is, nevertheless, the decent bystander, in so far as the Manhattan scene is concerned, that a majority of the Gotham impresarios have not learned what it is all about and are permitting themselves to be deluded by a basis of judgment of theater values that was outlawed back about 1914.

These "smart fellows are so dumb and impervious to arguments for their own best interests that they should be running side-show concessions down at Coney Island instead of attempting "big-time" theater!

That's my story and, as goes without saying, I'm stuck with it. These Broadway "geese" are too smart for a small-town feller. Or are they?

The tax problem is becoming acute in the minds of Hollywood players of the first flight.

The present inclination among the first-ranking actors of the film colony is to make fewer pictures per year, in order—of all things—to earn less! The catch is, of course, to work less, earn less and have about as much money as formerly at the end of the year! A good trick, even if you can't do it!

William Powell, according to an Associated Press dispatch that has just come to hand, has made known that his next contract will stipulate that he be starred in only two pictures a year.

"I'll work less, get more fun out of life and have just about as much money when I'm through," is the way he puts it. He would not comment specifically on the taxation aspects of his own case.

Tax payments, as compiled by R. E. Pirschell, film colony expert, mount in astonishing graduations.

Uncle Sam Gets His.

A salary of $50,000 per year must return a Federal tax of $9,700 and a State tax of $2,250, making a total of $11,975.

If you earn $75,000 per annum, these taxes step up to $19,400, $5,000 and a total of $24,400.

A $100,000 income must return $32,000 to the Federal Government and $7,950 to the State, for a total of $39,950.

If you earn $200,000 a year—and many do—the Federal establishment will take $88,500 and the State $21,450, making the handsome total of $109,450 that you do not get out of what you have earned.

If you care to go into the higher brackets—say the $500,000 class—then it becomes necessary to disburse to the Federal Treasury the modest sum of $255,000, with $75,000 for the State tax, which adds up to $330,000 that you do not get out of the $500,000 you have earned.

Deitrich Decamps.

In addition to Mr. Powell, Marlene Dietrich, even before her present studio difficulties, said she intended to go to England to make at least one picture, because she could keep more of the money she earned there.

An unconfirmed report, but one that is being widely discussed involves Wallace Beery.

Beery contracted to make a picture for a flat sum—or so it is said—the sum reputedly $100,000. His earnings from this film placed his total income for the year in a tax bracket above the one in which it otherwise would have been indexed. As a result, it is said, he paid $85,000 more in taxes than if he had not earned his $100,000.

So that is the way it goes, and that is the reason why such an exodus of American film stars to the studios of Gaumont British and the other London producing companies has set in.

You may recall the story of the man who killed the goose that laid the golden egg!

To elucidate a little the reference to Frau Dietrich's "studio difficulties," earlier in these dispatches, it might be well to say that the Teutonic star is headed for London films, leaving Paramount studios with a picture, but at the moment, no star to complete it. The blonde star walked off the set of "I Loved a Soldier" nearly a fortnight ago, simultaneously with the ousting of Ernst Lubitsch as production chief on the Paramount lot, as the result of a tiff with Mae West.

Lubitsch was working on the script of "I Loved a Soldier" with Miss Dietrich, penciling in the sophisticated touches for which he is famous. Without the benefit of a completed scenario, the German star already had made several sequences of the picture. Then a "front office" upheaval ousted Lubitsch and he packed his bags. Miss Dietrich went into seclusion. The completed film sequences were shelved.

Lubitsch lost out at Paramount shortly after Mae West had objected to some phases of production suggestions for her pictures, it is said. She left Hollywood, got as far East as Chicago, then returned to the West Coast when she learned that Lubitsch was on his way East.

So now you know.

They Frame a Cobb!

It is Henry Sutherland, one of the finger-in-the-wind operatives of United Press, who suggests that you'd never suspect Irvin Scarborough Cobb of being a jealous screen "beauty." But, it seems, he is.

Alan Dinehart discovered the quirk and turned it to good account in "Everybody's Old Man," the heavy-jowled, Kentucky humorist's first featured role.

Dinehart and Cobb played rival manufacturers, and Irvin, not the best actor in the world, carried the part with unshakeable urbanity when he should have registered anger.

"Terrible," whispered Director James Flood to Alan. "Make him sore. Get his goat somehow."

When next Cobb turned he saw Dinehart staring at him fixedly, and wanted to know why.

"Oh, I was just thinking about Oscar Wilde and the homely woman who caught him staring at her," said Dinehart.

"She said to Wilde: 'Sir, I suppose you think me the ugliest person in London.'

"'In the world, madam, in the world,' replied Wilde."

"Well, what about it?" rumbled Cobb.

"Oh, nothing very much, Irvin. But suppose you had been there. What could Wilde possibly have said to you?"

From then on, Cobb's face was a mask of anger every time he faced Dinehart, and if he forgot for a moment, Alan had only to look intently at him to call up the proper expression of rage.

They let Irvin in on the frameup after the picture was finished.

Word-to-the-Wise Note.

This may be spring, but I wouldn't change them too soon, if I were you!

Is Dancingest Gob in the Fleet

When "Follow the Fleet," the new RKO-Radio production, costarring Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, opens on the screen of the RKO-Keith Theater tomorrow, Washington picturegoers will be treated to one of Astaire's most versatile performances. He and Miss Rogers manage to get a good deal more comedy than usual into their dancing, both as soloists and as a team, and then Fred goes on from there, as he has once or twice before, to demonstrate his skill as a band leader and pianist. Very elegant entertainment.

Petri to Appear As Soloist Today

Egon Petri, distinguished Dutch pianist, who has frequently been heard here in recital, will make his first appearance as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra at a concert this afternoon at 4:45 in Constitution Hall. He will play the Bach concerto in D minor and Busoni's "Indianische Fantasie," which is based on American Indian themes.

Ferrucio Busoni, one of the greatest pianists and most original composers of the period from 1880 to 1924, was Petri's first teacher, and the two men were closely associated for many years. Mr. Petri was Busoni's assistant in the editing of Bach's clavier works. He is considered one of the leading authorities on Bach, and the best interpreter of Busoni's piano compositions.

Hans Kindler will present, for the first time in Washington, the C major symphony of Luigi Boccherini, and a chaconne by Henry Purcell, the great English composer (1658-1695). The program also includes the prelude to the third act of Die Meistersinger, and the "Song of the Rhine Daughters" from "Die Goetterdaemmerung."

Lunt-Fontanne Opening Holds New Week Lead

World Premiere of a New Sherwood Plays Tops New Theater Week.

The National Theater will resume its season's activities on next Monday night by presenting Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in the world premiere of a new play by Robert Emmett Sherwood, bearing the title of "Idiot's Delight." The Lunts terminated their engagement—also for the Theater Guild—in Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" while still playing to standing-room business, in order to present this timely new play by the author who a few seasons ago supplied them with "Reunion in Vienna," one of their most substantial hits. "Idiot's Delight" is said to be as new and fresh as this morning's headlines, dealing as it does with the world's current wars and rumors of war. In addition to Mr. Lunt and Miss Fontanne, the cast will include such distinguished players as Sydney Greenstreet, Richard Whorf, Bretaigne Windust, George Meader, Barry Thompson, Francis Compton, Jean McIntyre, Edward Raquello, Ernestine DeBekker and many more. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees. The first and second balconies already are sold out for the week and only orchestra seats remain available.

• • • •

"The Story of Louis Pasteur," perhaps the most impressive screen vehicle in which Paul Muni ever has appeared as star, will be the major screen attraction at the Warner Brothers Earle Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. Josephine Hutchinson, more beautiful than she ever before has been before the cameras, is Muni's leading woman, in the role of Mme. Pasteur. The story of the French chemist and bacteriologist, whose researches have done so much for the human race, presented the novelty of a picture that is primarily scientific and technical and yet manages to project an irresistible degree of genuine dramatic entertainment. The stage portion of the program will be headlined by Xavier Cugat and his Waldorf-Astoria Orchestra, dedicated to the celebration of Latin-American rhythms. With the band appear such artists as Georges and Jalna, exceptional dancers; Carmen Castillo, singer; Consuela and Thomas, rumba dancers; the Two Marias, Carlos Salazar, Large and Morgner and Carroll and Howe.

• • • •

Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers return to the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater tomorrow in RKO-Radio's picturization of the Belasco stage vehicle for Frances Starr, "Shore Leave," later known to the musical stage as "Hit the Deck." They are at the top of their form in this subject and present two hours of comedy, romance, songs and dances that will come close to matching the record of their last joint vehicle, "Top Hat." They are supported by a clever cast, headed by Randolph Scott and Harriet Hilliard. The dances introduced during the action of this comedy-romance take rank with the best these two stars have brought to the screen. Their final comedy number is a gem in which nothing comes out even! Short sound subjects and Pathe News will complete the bill.

• • • •

Music will take command at Loew's Fox Theater tomorrow. On the screen, the major feature will be "Anything Goes," the celluloid version of the Billy Gaxton-Victor Moore musical comedy, seen at the National earlier in the season, in which the principal roles are played by Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman and Charles Ruggles. Ida Lupino, Grace Bradley and Arthur Treacher are among the many others who lend added zest to this lively item. On the stage, "Fats" Waller, radio's disciple of "swing music," recently on the Fox screen in support of Warner Baxter, Alice Faye and Jack Oakie in "The King of Burlesque," will supply the living entertainment, with his orchestra. Others on the stage bill will include Stern and Vernon, Gwynne and, as an added attraction, Roger Pryor, former leading man of the National Theater Players and, since that remote day, one of the most successful stars of both stage and screen.

• • • •

Despite the fact that Mae West is not at the peak of her cinematographic achievement in "Klondike Annie," this latest release of the undulating blonde has compiled such an impressive box-office record in its first week that it will be continued a second, beginning tomorrow, at Loew's Palace Theater. In this oddly-contrived melodrama, the star is supported by Victor McLaglen, Lucille Gleason, Harry Beresford and a supporting ensemble of majestic proportions. The short subjects also will be carried over for the second week.

• • • •

Beginning with a late Friday night preview, the chief attraction on the screen at the Belasco Theater will be a request revival of United Artists picturization of Sinclair Lewis' novel of "Arrowsmith," with Ronald Colman, Myrna Loy and Helen Hayes in the pivotal parts. The supporting cast includes Richard Bennett, A. E. Anson, Charlotte Henry, Beulah Bondi, Bert Roach, Russell Hopton and Alec B. Francis. Short sound subjects and Pathe News will complete the bill.

• • • •

Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy will occupy the screen at the Columbia Theater, beginning tomorrow, in the splendid Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of "Rose Marie," the operetta by Rudolf Friml and Oscar Hammerstein 2d. Filmed up in the high Lake Tahoe country in California, this operetta takes two of the best voices in pictures out into the open and turns them loose. If you haven't already seen and heard this ace work, you should hurry to the Columbia and enjoy yourself.

• • • •

At the Metropolitan Theater, beginning tomorrow, the chief sceen feature will be "The Preview Murder Mystery," a Paramount production in which the principal roles are played by Reginald Denny, Frances Drake, Gail Patrick, Ian Keith and Rod LaRocque. Other old familiar faces in the cast will be those of Conway Tearle, Bryant Washburn, Jack Mulhall, Spencer Charters, Chester Conklin, Hank Mann and Franklyn Farnum.

• • • •

At the Gayety Theater next week, beginning with the usual Sabbath matinee, the attraction will be "The Jolly Girls," in which the foremost comedy roles will be taken by two of the Capital's favorite comedians, "Reds" Marshall and I. B. Hamp. On the distaff side, chief interest will center in the clever Gertrude Beck and that ebullient young redhead known by the name of sunkist, blonde Sunya "Smiles" Slayne.

Bluege Gives Lewis Tips On Fielding

Veteran Shows Rookie in Finer Points of Far Corner Play.

Youngster's Big Hands and Natural Instinct Draw Much Praise.

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

ORLANDO, Fla., March 4.—Tinker Field today was the scene of one of baseball's nobler episodes.

Out there on the diamond, where jealousy among the players abounds, was Ossie Bluege initiating into the finer points of third-base play without a trace of bitterness the young fellow who already is edging him out of the well-paying job he held securely for ten years on the Washington club.

Manager Bucky Harris and Owner Clark Griffith turned their attention away from young Lewis today. The arrival of Bluege in the Nats camp rendered their instruction of young Lewis not only superfluous and unnecessary but comical in the light of Bluege's capabilities.

Daddy of 'Em All.

That is Bluege's job down here—teaching young Lewis how to play third base, and he swung into it immediately this morning. The daddy of all the third basemen in Washington history, whose style of play was indeed the poetry of motion, whose ability the pinnacle of the art, has also the knack of imparting his knowledge.

He can still give Lewis two steps in the direction of the ball and outfield him, but it is younger blood with more speed on the bases and more power at bat that Manager Harris is seeking and of that Bluege is philosophically aware.

In such raw fundamentals as the way to straddle the bag, how to break on ground balls, where to shift his stance for different types of hitters and pitches and how to tag runners and get throws away, Bluege tutored Rookie Lewis today. And the young fellow was appreciative.

"He's swell," said Buddy, after the workout. "I don't see why they ever took him off the bag. He knows more about third base than I ever dreamed there was to know. But you can't help learning from a fellow like Ossie. He makes it easy for you. I'm a lot better third baseman right now than I was yesterday."

Wins Approval.

At the finish of the workout Lewis qualified for Bluege's stamp of approval. Ossie's first reaction was:

"He's got a great pair of hands."

You gleaned from that remark that a great pair of hands was a swell asset for a third baseman; that any infielder who didn't have a great pair of hands had small chance to make good, and Ossie knew, indeed, the value of those strong vibrant palms and fingers.

"I like him," added Ossie. "He's got instinct and he's smooth and natural; that's what I like. You can do something with a fellow like that. I won't guarantee that he'll have a great arm, but he'll learn how to throw, I'll bet.

Monte Weaver went to the mound in batting practice for the first time today and exhibited nothing that detracted from Owner Griffith's belief that the slender right-hander is due for a successful comeback. Possessed of native pitching sense and a good arm, Weaver needs only to hold his present poundage to make good, Griffith believes.

Alex Sabo, the former Fordham football star, is edging young Floyd Prettyman out of the catching, it appears from the attention he is drawing from Bucky Harris. One of the rare athletes whom football has not ruined for baseball, Sabo murdered the ball in batting practice and exhibited a throwing arm that drew gasps of delight from Harris.

Pimlico to Use 'Electric Eye' At Spring Meet

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., March 4.—The Maryland Jockey Club will introduce to Eastern race goers the "electric eye," or photo-finish device.

The stage isn't entirely set for the installation at Pimlico of the "electric eye," nor have the contracts been signed. But Charles E. McLane, president of the Maryland Jockey Club, said today that he has been negotiating for two weeks with the company manufacturing the device and that there isn't much doubt that it will be introduced at his track during the coming spring meeting.

At Pimlico, installation of the camera will be somewhat difficult. At Santa Anita Park, Arcadia, Calif., the picture-taking booth is atop the grandstand, surveyed on the finish line.

The grandstand here isn't high enough to enable a camera placed there to get a picture of the entire breadth of the track at the finish line. But McLane spoke of mounting the camera atop the totalisator pay-off board in the infield.

However, engineers of the company manufacturing the "electric eye" will be here late this week to make a careful survey of the Pimlico problems.

Apitz Given Contract.

Louisville, Ky., March 4 (AP).—The University of Louisville today gave Lawrence E. Apitz, assistant to Alonzo Stagg at the College of the Pacific in California, a two-year contract as athletic director. He succeeds C. V. Money.

Miss Berg's Par Golf Brings Victory

Defeats Mrs. Harbaugh, 6 and 4; Mrs. Crews Also Victorious.

By the Associated Press.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 4. Patty Berg, 18-year-old Minneapolis high school girl, headed toward another winter triumph today as she overwhelmed Mrs. C. R. Harbaugh, of Cleveland, 6 and 4, in the first round of the Florida East Coast Women's Tournament.

Playing what she termed "erratic golf," Miss Berg made up for an unimpressive showing on the greens with a series of long-distance wood shots and brilliant approaches.

Forecasting an epic finals struggle if form holds good, Mrs. Maureen Orcutt Crews, of Miami, defeated her younger opponent, Agnes Garvey, of London, Ont., 8 and 6.

Patty needed even 40, women's par on the first nine, today. She played the five remaining holes in 22, again women's par.

Other well-known players in the select field advanced without undue difficulty. In the only match of the first flight to go the full distance Jan Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., eked out a 1-up triumph over Mrs. Lillian K. Zech, of Chicago.

Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., who opposes Patty Berg tomorrow, downed Marian Turpie Lake, of New York, former Southern champion, 6 and 5.

The veteran Mrs. Opal S. Hill, of Kansas City, eliminated young Ella Mae Williams, of Chicago, 5 and 4. Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., defeated Mary Pietsch, of Evanston, Ill., 6 and 5.

With a performance far better than her ragged qualifying round, Marian Miley, dark-haired Lexington, Ky., topnotcher, won over Frances Owen, of Jacksonville, Fla., 5 and 4.

Operation Not Necessary On Terry's Injured Knee

Memphis, Tenn., March 4 (AP).—Manager Bill Terry of the New York Giants, who came home today for an examination of an old knee injury, was told by a specialist today that an operation will not be necessary.

"It is merely a recurrence of the old trouble," the bone specialist announced after examining Terry's swollen knee.

"It was caused by over-exertion after the usual winter idleness, and I think it will heal itself if Terry takes it easy for a couple of weeks."

Elated over the diagnosis, Terry planned to return to the Giants' training camp at Pensacola, Fla., tonight or tomorrow morning.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Orlando, Fla., March 4.

SOME facts on Pete Appleton, the 31-year-old rookie who is attempting a big league comeback with the Nats, came to light in the Washington camp today. Their source was Frank Shaughnessy, manager of the pennant-winning Montreal team, which sold Appleton to the Nats last fall at the waiver price of $7,500.

POVICH.

Shaughnessy, who is the author of the playoff plan to decide pennant winners now popular in virtually every minor league, foresees Appleton as a positive sensation in his third trip to the big leagues.

"Somewhere, the guy has learned to pitch," said the Montreal manager. "With us last year, he was great—really great. He not only won the most games—22—but he was the best pitcher in the league. He's got an overhand curve that's as good as Tommy Bridges' and I'm not kidding. I don't see how he can miss in the American League. Fellows who just begin to get good at his age are no flashes in the pan. Look at Dazzy Vance."

Shaughnessy directed his next remark at Clark Griffith, the Washington owner. "But listen, Griff," he said, "if old Pete tries to give 'em that side-arm stuff, why, shoot him. He can't pitch that way, but he thinks he can. Fine him the first time he tries it and he'll behave. The only time he lost a game for us was when he got careless."

Appleton's pitching motion is more than vaguely similar to that of Bridges. He does pitch with the same long forward step and high, overhand delivery, but it would be more accurate to say that his motion resembles most that of old Alec McColl, Chattanooga's Methuselah of the mound. Like McColl's, Appleton's motion is more deliberate than Bridges. To an onlooker, it seems that Pete is never going to turn the ball loose.

"And listen," added Shaughnessy, "you won't be lifting old Pete for any pinch-hitters, either. That old guy can sock. Why, he had a batting average of .330 with us last year. We had nine hitters in the line-up whenever he was working. I know how tough it is to have to lift a pitcher who is holding the opposition because you can't afford to leave him in there to bat, but you can afford to leave Appleton in there. He's pretty good with that stick."

It seems that Montreal came into possession of Appleton in midsummer of 1934 after the Yankees had released him to the Baltimore Orioles. That was the season when old Pete decided that Jablonowski was no fit name for the national pastime and adopted the American translation of Appleton. Anyway, Pete had no luck with the Orioles, blaming his losses on his inability to pitch in the band-box Baltimore park.

So the Orioles sent him to Rochester on option, a league rule which was later abrogated. When he won 11 games and lost only 2, Shaughnessy became interested in him. He was still the property of the Orioles who could not conceive that old Pete was that good a pitcher and readily sold him to Montreal for $4,000. Appleton blossomed as the sensation of the minor leagues last year with his 22 victories for Montreal and Griffith eagerly grabbed him in the draft.

In Short——

Alex Sabo, the former Fordham football tackle, took rank with Roberto Estallella today as the only player here to reach the leftfield fence with a fly ball in batting practice . . . The regular Washington infield of 1936 was on view today for the first time when Buddy Myer assumed his place at second base . . . Carl Reynolds was in uniform for the first time and did nothing to disturb his reputation as the greatest spring hitter in baseball . . . he was slamming the ball to the outfield on a line with his batting eye apparently as rusty as a newly minted nickel . . . Zinn Beck, Chattanooga scout, perked up today and displayed great interest in Hucky Wynne, the Washington sandlotter, who hit the ball far and wide in batting practice.

Grid Pool Ban Annoys Britain

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, March 4.—A sudden interlude in the tension of war troubled Europe has struck Britain—blasting politics, Hitler and Mussolini off the front pages for a "crisis" nearer home.

The hue and cry arose over an attempt by the National Football League to banish giant betting pools—form-sheet forecasts on the weekly soccer football matches, operated by 285 major pools throughout the Nation.

They are willing, with few audible grumbles, to pay $1.12 out of every $5 in their weekly salaries for income tax. They accept the "Dora," the war-time defense of the realm act which sends them home from the corner pub in the shank of the evening, at 10:30 or 11 o'clock each night when the barmaid calls "time, gentlemen — please!" and blinks out the lights.

But when the football league attempted to stop the "little man's little gamble," by running the football penny and six-penny pools out of business, they rose up in arms.

Newspaper columns ordinarily devoted to "Letters to the Editor" suddenly went over entirely to blasts from indignant citizens wanting to know why they should be deprived of the chance to bet 2 cents against a possible return of a fabulous fortune.

In vain, newspaper editors called in mathematicians and informed wager-minded readers that their chances of winning are only 1 in 500,000 for the popular 12-match pool and 1 in 3,500,000,000 in the 20-match pools.

Others pointed out that the pool promoters reap a clear 25 per cent profit from the $45,000,000 subscribers each season by the "sucker" public. Still others called it the "biggest racket on earth."

The mushroom growth of the system is shown by the fact that one of the major pools, in Liverpool, started from bedrock less than a year ago and today employs 1,500 girls to handle the millions of coupons containing the "subscribers" forecasts on the results of league matches.

Doser Leads Par-Breaking Golf Field

12 Pros Under Mark in Hollywood Open; Cox, Cruickshank Get 138s.

By the Associated Press.

HOLLYWOOD, Fla., March 4. Young Clarence Doser, of Rochester, N. Y., led 61 professional golfers into the final 36 holes of the $2,500 Hollywood Open tournament today after an almost unprecedented exhibition of par-shattering golf.

The 27-year-old Doser added a 3 under par 67 to yesterday's 68 to take the 36-hole lead with a total of 135, but he was joined by 12 other professionals in breaking par for the first two rounds. Six others matched par for the 6,350-yard Hollywood Country Club course.

Scores of 147 or better qualified for tomorrow's play.

One stroke back of Doser, at 136, were four nationally known professionals—Harry Cooper, Chicago; John Revolta, Milwaukee; Vic Ghezzi, Deal, N. J., and Denny Shute, Boston—and youthful Tony Penna, of Pensacola, Fla., the 18-hole leader.

Penna Slumps.

Penna, who equaled the competitive course record yesterday with his remarkable 64, slumped to 72 today.

Cooper and Ghezzi put together two 68s for their totals, while Shute and Revolta, who had 67s yesterday, needed 69s today.

A pair of golfing brothers from Pittston, Pa., F. J. and Donald J. Allen, took charge of the amateur division, both posting 1 over par 71s for 36-hole totals of 144 and 145 to take first and second place. Howard Tryon, the 18-hole leader with 72, had 74 today and took third place.

In all, 11 amateurs with 160 or better qualified for the last day's play.

Made Two Mistakes.

Doser's score today could just as well have been 65 as 67, for two errors offset his five birdies. At the fourth his putt from 3 feet failed to drop for the par, and he flubbed an iron at the sixteenth to go 1 over there. The rest of the way he was dead to the pin with approaches and running down putts nicely.

Two strokes back of the Rochester youth and the quintet just on his heels came Bobby Cruickshank, Richmond, Va., with 67—71—138; Gene Kunes, Hollywood, Fla., 71—67—138; Wiffy Cox, Bethesda, Md., 71—67—138, and Tom Kerrigan, Siwanoy, N. Y., 69—69—138.

Three others—Leo Mallory, Norton, Conn.; Al Krueger, the Beloit, Wis., semipro baseball pitcher, and Leo Walper, Washington—were bracketed at 139, while Johnny Farrell, playing over his home course; Willie MacFarlane, New York; Frank Walsh, Chicago; Bill Mehlhorn, Louisville; Ky Laffoon, Chicago, and Lew Waldon, Chicago, were tied at 140, even par.

Hagerstown Ball Player Sets Soup-Eating Record

Hagerstown, March 4 (AP).—Paul Alexander, Hagerstown baseball player, had proved he was no slouch at eating soup.

Alexander dropped into a restaurant and polished off five bowls of clam chowder, eight bowls of cream of tomato soup and two bowls of pea soup.

Then he offered to bet the crowd he could down five more. There were no takers.

Carnera Bout Probe Today Ordered

N. Y. Investigates Report Primo and Gastanaga Have Same Pilot.

Principals Called Before Commission; Match May Be Canceled.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

NEW YORK, March 4.—Information obtained by the United Press that Primo Carnera, former heavyweight champion, and Isidoro Gastanaga, of Spain, scheduled to meet in a 10-round bout at Madison Square Garden Friday night, are nominally under the same management will be investigated tomorrow by the New York State Athletic Commission.

"If we find that Carnera and Gastanaga are handled by the same group, the fight won't go on," said Bill Brown, outspoken member of the three-man commission.

Brig. Gen. John J. Phelan, chairman of the commission, conducted a private investigation today of Louis Soresi, Carnera's manager, and John Rizzi, Gastanaga's reputed manager, and has ordered both men to appear before him tomorrow. All principals involved, including Solly King, who has a contract to manage Gastanaga until May, 1938, will be summoned before a showdown meeting of the commission Friday.

Former Rizzi Employe.

Soresi, who became Carnera's manager after the giant Italian split with Leon See, his discoverer, is a former employe of Rizzi. They both reside in the same hotel in New York. On Gastanaga's arrival here recently from Cuba Soresi introduced Rizzi, new to the boxing game, to various persons as "Gastanaga's new manager." One of these introductions took place in the offices of the New York commission.

Before Castanaga left Cuba he attempted to persuade his former manager, Solly King, to send him money to return here to fight under his management again. While attempting to book fights for Gastanaga, King received a cable from the Spaniard saying: "Unless you wire $500 immediately, I'm sailing to fight for Soresi."

King, who managed Gastanaga during his stay here a few years ago, next heard of Gastanaga in training at Pompton Lakes to meet Carnera, a match Gastanaga's former manager had attempted to make himself without success. King's contract, drawn up in Chicago and on file with the Illinois State Athletic Commission, has been held legal by Justice McCook of the New York State Supreme Court. Justice McCook today granted King a writ of attachment and Gastanaga's purse, and it was served on Madison Square Garden.

Sought to Buy Contract.

While Gastanaga was in Cuba, Soresi approached King in an effort to buy the Spaniard's contract, offering a sum of several thousand dollars and a percentage of the Spaniard's subsequent fights. King refused the offer, but told Soresi he would sell his claim on Gastanaga's services for $25,000, the sum he has spent on the fighter in doctor bills, hotel bills, transportation and general support.

During his negotiations with Soresi, King sounded Carnera's manager out on a possible Carnera-Gastanaga bout. Soresi, according to King, said: "Carnera will never fight Gastanaga unless I'm Gastanaga's manager."

Tribute Paid Rockne's Memory at Crash Site

Bazaar, Kans., March 4 (AP).—Knute Rockne's friends paid tribute to his memory today at the place where the famous Notre Dame football coach plunged to his death in an airplane crash five years ago.

Several hundred persons gathered here to attend memorial services observing Rockne's forty-eighth birth anniversary. A marble monument marks the scene of the crash that killed Rockne and seven others March 31, 1931.

Athletes, coaches, business and professional men, Catholic Church dignitaries and personal friends of Rockne were in the assembly.

Cup Prospects Take Indoor Matches

Van Ryn-Mangin Win Two Victories; Bowden and McCauliff Score.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, March 4.—Prospects for the 1936 Davis Cup team went on display today as doubles competition dominated the national indoor tennis program.

Johnny Van Ryn, veteran Davis Cup doubles partner of Wilmer Allison, paired with Gregory Mangin, of Newark, N. J., and won two matches to advance to the semi-final round. Mangin and his long-standing treammate, Berkeley Bell, who is now a professional, won the title a year ago.

The Van Ryn-Mangin combination's first victims were a couple of New York boys, James Fishbach and Howard Stephens, who yielded in straight sets, 6—4, 6—3. After an hour's rest they took the measure of Albert Law nad Ray Palmer, jr., 6—1, 6—4, in a match which fairly bristled with spectacular play. It was one of Van Ryn's rare appearances on board courts and the Philadelphian played at the peak of his form.

Double Victory.

Frank Bowden, of New York, and Dr. Eugene McCauliff, the transplanted New Yorker now living in Chicago, also gained a penultimate round bracket and will clash with Mangin and Van Ryn when the doubles competition is resumed on Friday. First they accounted for Ed McKnight, of Springfield, Mass., and Frank Lawrence, of Los Angeles, 6—0, 6—2, and then they took the measure of Gil Hunt, of Washington, and Al Stitt, of Boston, 6—1, 6—3.

The Davis Cup aspirations of Henry Culley, of Santa Barbara, Calif., and Wilmer Hines, of Columbia, S. C., were endangered for a time by Merritt Cutler, a veteran of more than a decade on boards, and youthful Charlie Battmann.

The women's division advanced to the semi-final stage with the preferred teams winning much as they pleased. The top-ranked Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, and Mrs. Dorothy Andrus dropped four games in winning from Mrs. E. C. Goddard, of Boston, and Esther Edwards, of New Haven; Marjorie Gladman Van Ryn and Mrs. Henry C. Brunie eliminated Minnie Fullen, of Waco, Tex., and Mrs. Malcolm La Prade, of New York, likewise with the loss of only four games, and Norma Taubele and Florence Le Boutillier blanked Jane Kelterborn and Mrs. T. C. Jones.

Ludmillar Isnard and Mrs. A. R. E. Pinchot, of New York, advanced by default.

Racing Rules Violation Charged

Riding 'Unsatisfactory,' Say Hialeah Stewards; Mounts Canceled.

Commission Gets Case; Red Badge Reversal Believed Connected.

By the Associated Press.

HIALEAH PARK, Fla., March 4.—Jockey Don Meade today was suspended for the meeting and his case referred to the Florida State Racing Commission by the Miami Jockey Club stewards. Meade was charged with unsatisfactory riding and violation of the rules of racing.

This was the only official information the stewards would reveal. However, two stewards who refused to have their names mentioned intimated that Meade never would ride again. It was a well-known fact that officials have been on Meade's trail for more than two years.

Meade Leading Rider.

Meade, one of the leading lightweight veterans in the country, today led the local boys with 30 winning mounts for the meeting. He was in much demand by the horsemen, who preferred to ride the E. R. Bradley contract jockey. Meade had seven mounts today, but the officials forced him to cancel them.

Meade, whose home is listed as being in Plankington, S. Dak., and his age as 22, has been riding about six years. He had the mount on his employer's Broker's Tip when the Bradley colt beat out Mrs. Silas B. Mason's Head Play in the roughest Kentucky Derby on record, featured by the battle between Meade and Fisher, who rode Head Play, in the bitter stretch drive.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hialeah Race Track, Fla., March 4.—Although it had been press-box gossip that Jockey Don Meade, suspended here today, had been under suspicion for "certain irregularities," the ruling came as a surprise to both the turf writers and the jockey.

Told to Leave Track.

Meade, who had a full program for today, was in the jockeys' room awaiting post time for the first race in which he was to have ridden, Camino Real, when the order came. Meade was told to don his civilian clothes and leave the racing plant.

Due to the fact that George Hamilton, owner of Red Badge, was ordered to the stands following Meade's victory on that horse yesterday, it is believed that the immediate cause of the ruling had to do with the form reversal of the sprinter. Meade had guided Red Badge to an easy triumph in yesterday's first race. In his previous effort, Red Badge had finished last in a similar race.

Hamilton, Meade and track officials refused to talk following the ruling.

A life suspension for Jockey Don Meade in Florida would bar him from virtually every track in the country. Florida is a member of the National Association of Racing Commissioners, and the ruling would hold in all States covered by that body including, among others, Maryland, New York, Illinois, Massachusetts and California.

Meade was the target for much criticism last year in Maryland and at one stage of the season was escorted to and from the track by a bodyguard.

It was at nearby tracks that Meade earned the monickler of "Longshot," and it was at Laurel where he attracted the eye of Col. E. R. Bradley who placed him under contract. Meade is a brother-in-law of Jockey Johnny Gilbert, who married the Bradley rider's sister.

G. W. Cubs Go Two Extra Periods to Down Rockville, 31-26

Frosh Reach Semifinals In A.A.U.

Surburban Five's Game Fight Is Futile as 500 Watch.

By Dave Herman.

TWO five-minute extra periods were required before the George Washington University's freshman team defeated Rockville's stout-hearted warriors last night at Heurich's gym in a thrilling unlimited game of the District A. A. U.-Post basketball championship.

In the most sensational battle of all the battles in this division this reason, the Buff and Blue collegians won by 31 to 26 before a crowd of 500 spectators.

The victory sent the Colonial yearlings into the semifinals. Saturday night at Heurich gym they will meet the winner of the Resettlement-Olmsted Grill game scheduled for tomorrow night. Investigation meets Y. M. C. A. in a quarter-finals game, and Friday night Rinaldi will face the winner of that game for the right to play in the finals.

Heurich's gym was no place for faint hearts last night, as thrill piled on thrill.

Rockville Ahead.

Rockville, to the lusty cheers of more than 100 supporters, rode into an early lead, traveled at a fast clip for 20 minutes, and outscored the freshmen, 17 to 10.

The Frosh answered the gong for the second half with renewed vigor and shooting skill. In three minutes the Rockville lead had melted like so much butter in a tropical sun.

Goals by Silkowitz, Collins and Faris brought the freshmen to the fore, 20 to 17, and then the ten players went at it hammer and tong. Becker, Rockville guard, and Joe Brennan, G. W. forward, only local boy on the team, wen tout on fouls.

Lanier and Herschberger potted goals, and with ten seconds left, with the score 22-21, and Rockville leading, the G. W. cause appeared lost. But new hope came to the yearlings when Lanier fouled Silkowitz, and the big, swarthy New York boy sank the free throw that balanced the scales at 22-all.

George Drops Foul.

In the first extra period, George, of Rockville, got a foul, and Silkowitz scored a field goal. Herschberger then sank one from the side for what looked like the winning shot.

It was 25-23, Rockville. Four seconds were left to play. The timer was about to pull the gong when Bob Faris, of G. W., tossed in one from the side to knot the count again.

In the second extra period, the freshmen set a burning pace, as Collins fired a long shot that did not touch the cords. Silkowitz shot in another, and Baronio followed with still another.

Keen handling of the ball by Silkowitz, his coolness under fire, proved to be a vital factor in the freshmen's triumph. But those plucky Rockville boys almost upset the dope again and played remarkable basketball even in defeat.

Northeast Boys' Club defeated Shamrock Cleaners, 38-33, and Washington Boys' Club swamped Takoma Boys' Club, 36-14, in the 145-pound games.

Jack Tornado Sub For Deacon Dixon

Leroy Haynes won't have to fight Deacon Leonard Dixon, after all, in tomorrow night's 10-round feature of the all-colored boxing show at the Turner Arena. It seems that Matchmaker Billy Edwards decided yesterday that Dixon couldn't get in shape for the fray and substituted one Jack Tornado, of Philadelphia.

Haynes' record includes a short-order knockout victory over Reds Barry, of this city, as well as similar verdicts over Hans Birkie, Ford Smith, Tony Cancela, Salvatore Ruggirello, Tony Starr and Willie Reddish, while Tornado has beaten Ace Clark and Jack Thomas.

In the eight-round semifinal Sammy Williams and Jimmy Glascoe will be swapping swats for the District colored middleweight championship. Buddy Hayes faces Willie Green in a special six-rounder, while Jim Lamar boxes Johnny Thomas in the four-round opener.

As an added feature there will be a battle royal involving specially selected talent preceding the main event.

Roosevelt Didn't Beat Real Tech Team—Coach

Rusty Thompson, Tech High basketball coach, last night discredited his junior varsity's defeat at the hands of the Roosevelt Jayvees on Tuesday, saying that the Tech team was not an official representative, that the game was unscheduled and played entirely without his knowledge.

Major Clubs Demand Polish Of Their Rookies, Wynne Finds

(This is the seventh of a series of daily articles by Huck Wynne, Washington sandlot star, telling of his experiences at the Nationals' training camp, where he is being given a free trial at the expense of The Washington Post).

By Huck Wynne.

ORLANDO, Fla., March 4.—Another thing I've learned about the big leagues since I started training with the Washington team is that you're supposed to know the fundamentals of the game before you join a big league club.

I always thought that in big league training camps they taught fellows how to slide, how to run the bases and tag runners, etc., but that's not true.

Manager Bucky Harris, who is always willing to talk baseball with anybody who wants to talk it, was telling me on the bus going back to the hotel today why they don't have such things as sliding pits and a lot of instruction of the rookies outside of the pitchers.

They can't waste time on that kind of business, Bucky said, if a fellow doesn't know how to slide or run the bases or tag a runner, then he has no business in a big league camp, according to Bucky.

To use Bucky's own words, "the woods are full of fellows who can do all of those things," but they've got to have that added something that makes 'em big leaguers. Any good minor leaguer learns all the game's fundamentals well, and if a fellow is so green that he doesn't know 'em, then they're only wasting time with him in a big league camp.

With the pitchers it's different, according to Bucky. If a fellow has a good fast ball an fair control, then he's worth tinkering with If his action and his delivery can be improved, then he might make the team a valuable asset.

I've found out that pitchers get more consideration than infielders, any way. Big league managers are always on the watch for diamonds in the rough among the rookie pitchers, but if an infielder has one weakness, why he's up against it.

Newsom Sets Speed Record; Photographer, Griff Unhappy

By a Staff Correspondent.

ORLANDO, Fla., March 4.—Buck Newsom tonight was the winner of a modest $5 bet, a newspaper photographer was suffering from a severe case of jitters and Clark Griffith, owner of the Washington club, had worked himself up into a high state of fury.

Scene: The lobby of the Angbilt Hotel where the Washington team makes its headquarters here during the training season.

An elevator descends, Buck Newsom emerges, saunters through the lobby, notices a newspaper photographer busily engaged in holding down the upholstery.

Newsom: Say, buddy, wanta take a ride?

Photographer: What for, where ya going?

Newsom: Oh, just down the street, come on take a ride.

Photographer: Okay, you won't be gone long?

Newsom: No, we won't waste any time.

Newsom and photographer enter parking lot, hop into Buck's sedan model of a popular priced car and head for the road to Miami.

Photographer: Where ya going?

Newsom: Oh, just out for a spin. Five minutes later the speedometer reads 60 miles per hour.

Photographer: Say Buck, you're going 60.

Newsom: I know it.

Photographer: Hey, Buck, you're going 70.

Newsom: I know it. Now watch.

Amid a crunching of gears, Newsom shifts into second. The speedometer reads 72, 73, 75.

Photographer: Hey, Buck!

Newsom: Can you read?

Photographer: Yeah, but——

Newsom: Never mind that, no buts. Lookit that speedometer. Does it say 75?

Photographer: Yeah, but——

Newsom: Okay, then, remember it.

On the way back to town with the photographer shaking like Gilda Gray with an attack of palsy and demanding a drink of hard likker straight, Newsom explained:

"I just made a bet with Earl Whitehill that I could do 75 in this bus in second gear. I needed somebody for a witness. Thanks a lot, buddy. Where do you want me to let you out?"

When the stunt of his $40,000 pitcher reached the ears of Clark Griffith later in the evening, the Nats' owner erupted:

"He's screwy. Any more such damfoolishness and I'll cut his salary, contract or no contract."

Police Fight Show Scheduled May 25

The annual police boxing show will be held here on Monday, May 25, Maj. Harvey L. Miller, chairman of the District of Columbia Boxing Commission and matchmaker for the affair, announced last night. Maj. Miller intends to book a championship bout of some description to head the charity battles.

Definite negotiations are under way to bring a return match between Petey Sarron and Freddy Miller to Washington. Sarron lost to the world featherweight champion by such a close margin in Miami Monday that the battle would create great interest in this section.

Other possibilities in the event that the rematch falls through, include:

Phil Furr vs. Barney Ross, for the welterweight crown; Furr vs. Kid Azteca, the champion of Mexico; the winner of a Phil Gallagher-Bob Tow fight vs. Primo Carnero and the actual second meeting of Tow and Gallagher.

The Ross fight is necessarily indefinite because of his tentative plans to visit Australia, and Carnera's future is never certain from week to week, so the matchmaker is still up in the air.

Investigation To Play 'Y' Tonight

A. A. U. Program Also to Feature Resettlement Tomorrow Night.

BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION'S powerful quintet, improved tremendously since Ed Hargaden, Georgetown's former star, rejoined the team, will meet Central Y. M. C. A. tonight at Heurich's gym in an unlimited quarter-finals game of the District A. A. U.-Washington Post basketball championship. Game time is 9:30.

Four 145-pound teams will face the barrier. At 7:30 Bovello Plumbers will oppose the Jewish Community Center, and at 8:30 Cook's Flashes will take on McFarland Young Men's Club.

If the favored G-Men win, they will move into the semifinals, and will battle their old rivals, Rinaldi Tailors, in the upper bracket tomorrow night.

Large Crowd Expected.

This game, featuring some of the best basketball players in Washington, is expected to bring out the largest crowd of the season. As an added incentive, Resettlement, which barely won from Jewish Community Center, will meet Olmsted Grill at 8:30 in a battle to determine which team will enter the semifinals of the lower bracket.

In its debut, Investigation showed plenty of scoring power in crushing the Ramblers, Hargaden, Bill Hopkins and Jock Leverton being the big point-getters. Starting with with these three tonight will be Bernie Jones and Herb Thompson, who will hold down the guard positions. Others who will be seen in action are Downy Rice, Mike and Joe Lynch, Bob Fletcher and Forrest Burgess.

Coach Bernie Phillips, of the "Y," will have available the two Farris brothers, Moon, Johnson, Madden, Bousman, Rickman and Klein.

The Heurich gym is located at Twenty-sixth and D streets northwest, and may be reached easily by way of Constitution or New Hampshire avenues.

Dean vs. Davis Approved by Rickey

By the Associated Press.

BRADENTON, Fla., March 4.—An interlude of fisticuffs has been threatened in the feud between Dizzy Dean, holdout pitcher, and Virgil Davis, 200-pound catcher.

Davis, it developed today as the St. Louis club shoved off for Havana and a four-game series in the Cuban capital, has promised to "knock Dean's block off" the minute the pitcher walks into the clubhouse here.

The "gashouse gang" is all steamed up over the prospect, it arises from the recent statement by Dean that he "would never pitch another ball to Davis." Dizzy blamed the catcher's judgment for the loss of several close decisions during the hectic 1935 season.

This aroused the Southern blood of Davis, 6-foot, 197-pound Birmingham, Ala., product. The story among the Cardinals is that Davis went to Vice President Branch Rickey and Manager Frankie Frisch and told them of his plans to punch Dizzy in the nose.

"Well," Rickey is reported to have said, "it may do the fellow good."

Johnny Dean to Fight Tramberia in Semifinal

Irish Johnny Dean, the well-known Carolina lightweight, was signed yesterday to box rough and ready Jim Tramberia, of Baltimore in six-round semifinal support of the Phil Furr-Mickey Serrian feature Monday night at the Turner Arena.

The rishman will be remembered for his stirring victory over Bobby Dechter last week on the Nichy-Mader card. In Tramberia Dean mixes with one of the most bruising workmen to show here in many months.

Lou Gevinson Wins Arena Feature

1,200 Watch District Ace Battle Foe, All of 12 Bouts Thrillers.

The Southwest lad punched his way to a comfortable lead in each of the five rounds to gain a unanimous decision. Routson, however, was game to the core and seemed reluctant to have his pretentious winning streak of 28 bouts brought to a halt.

Sticks It Out.

After punishing the Virginian mercilessly for four rounds, Gevinson tried for a knockout in the final heat. He did manage to floor his man for the count of nine with a looping right to the body. But Routson staggered to his feet and stuck it out.

In the semifinal bout Brookes Bowen, of the Richmond A. C., upset George Pickeral, of the Olympic A. C. The Richmonder bloodied Pickeral's nose early in the first round and won the unanimous decision of the judges and referee.

Preliminaries.

150-pound class—Jim Matthews (Richmond A. C.) defeated Willie Pell (Olympic A. C.), on a split decision.

Brown to Captain 1937 C. U. Tossers

Lettermen of Catholic University's basketball team, which recently completed a successful campaign, yesterday unanimously elected Herbert (Zeke) Brown, a guard, captain of the 1936-37 quintet.

Selection of the Williamsport Pa., youth as the Cardinal leader was not surprising as he is one of the most popular athletes on the campus. A junior in the School of Arts and Sciences, Brown broke into the varsity line-up last year, replacing Gene Augusterfer at forward when the latter was declared scholastically ineligible.

Score: 10 to 7.

What is believed to be the basketball season's low-scoring record was established yesterday at the Washington Boys' Club, where the Calvert Indians scalped the Boys' Club Blues, 10 to 7.

Records Defended By Terp Trackmen

Maryland's mighty men of the speedway have their task cut out for them Saturday in the Southern Conference indoor championships at Chapel Hill, for the Terps must defend two records they made last year against one of the best track fields ever arraigned for the games.

Nine champions will defend their laurels, among them Warren Evans, Old Line ace, who kicked up his heels and turned in a 52.5 quarter-mile last winter to win the event. Saturday he faces a crack field that includes three former champions.

Maryland's mile relay team probably will experience its greatest difficulties with Duke and North Carolina, each of which has been pointing for this meet.

Other champions participating in the games are Luther Williams, Duke, shot-put; Cullen Wilkin, Virginia, and Hillman Myers, Duke, co-champions in the high jump; Harry Williamson, North Carolina, 880 and mile; Dick Bear, North Carolina and Joe Leidy, Duke, co-winners in the pole vault.

Panthers Take Early Lead and Never Slacken; Bassin Stars.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., March 4.—The Pitt Panthers avenged a previous extra-period defeat at the hands of the Georgetown Hoyas, 43-36. The game was played at the Pitt Stadium.

The Panthers started fast and held a 9-to-0 lead before the Hoyas' captain, Gibeau, scored a field goal. The visitors had a tough time getting any shots, because Pitt's defense seemed to be flawless. Up until the last minute and a half of the first quarter Georgetown had scored but one two-pointer, but Bassin ended up the game in a blaze of glory with seven double-deckers and four fouls for eighteen points. During the first period the losers had only three field goals and five fouls out of ten tries at the free-throw line. The score at halftime was 28-11 in favor of the Panthers.

Hoyas Good at Fouls.

When the second half started, Radvansky scored a field goal for Pitt. Bassin came back with one of his seven fielders. From this point on Georgetown scored ten points to pull up to within nine points of the victors, and Pitt took time out. Georgetown was very good at the charity line, scoring 12 out of 19 fouls.

Brewers Will Rely On Zahn in Battle

As Otts Zahn goes so go the Heurichs.

It sounds pretty rash, but when the Brewers meet their most persistent basketball rivals, the Gettysburg Fleet Wings, Sunday afternoon, it will be up to Zahn to save the Beer Barons from humiliation.

Zahn was once a Fleet Wing, and in that mantel he brought disaster upon the Brewers. Twice last season and once this year he was high scorer against them. So they brought him here. Now, if he does not produce against his old mates, it will place Heurichs in the same embarrassing position as the man who finds the farm he bought is under 5 feet of water.

Delaware & Hudson and Resettlement Administration battle for the trophy and silver basketballs which will be awarded for the second place team in the Heurich Amateur League.

Hayman, Devitt Prep Star, Has 'White Hope' Ambitions

RUBE HAYMAN, husky 190-pound 6-foot Devitt Prep School athlete, wants to qualify as a "white hope" in Jack Dempsey's campaign to dig up a heavyweight capable of stopping Joe Louis.

Hayman admitted yesterday that he was "plenty green at the game," but he wants to take a fling at it, confident he can get somewhere.

Slated to matriculate at Dartmouth next fall, Hayman next week will test his mettle in the District A. A. U. boxing championships at Turner's Arena.

His face a mask of determination, the all-prep tackle went through a brisk workout at Jewish Community Center yesterday under the watchful eye of Jim McNamara, who has been responsible for the success of many sterling amateur boxers.

"I think Hayman's got the stuff," McNamara said. "He's strong as a bull, uses his fists rather well for an embryo, and I wouldn't be surprised to see him upset some of these boys next week."

Hayman never put on gloves seriously until a few months ago. This he did at the suggestion of Natie Brown, the only man who has traveled the limit in a bout wih Louis, since the Brown Embalmer started cutting a wide swath in heavyweight cricles.

Natie and Rube go at it rather vigorously in the J. C. C. gym. Natie thinks he's good.

Quite a basketball player is this Hayman. He almost won the game for J. C. C. against Resettlement in The Post tournament last week.

Inter-City Pin Race Interest Increases

Slipping Occidentals to tFace Temple Dixie Pigs; A. and P. Sweeps.

THREE weeks ago, the Southern Inter-City Duckpin League, boasting the greatest group of maple shooters ever assembled in the South, was just going through its schedule with interest in the standings of the teams at a low ebb. The comparison of individual stars from which a possible national champion could be chosen was creating most of the interest.

But with the slump of the leading Occidental Restaurant team, the race has opened up and two Baltimore teams, the Recreation Center and Plaza Alleys are waging a desperate battle to oust the local team from the lead which they have enjoyed since the start of the season.

Occidental vs. Dixie Pig.

This is "at home" week with all teams facing their home town rivals. The fast-slipping Occidentals will be put to the test this Saturday at Convention Hall against a fighting Temple Dixie Pig team, smarting from its four defeats last week from the Plaza All-Stars. This match will top the local card and duckpin enthusiasts are due to witness some classy shooting. If the Pigs turn the trick and upset the Occidentals, it is possible for the Recreation Center five of Baltimore to hop into possession of first place if they succeed in gaining a runaway verdict over their local rivals, the Plaza All-Stars.

Close to 50 entries have been lined up for the third annual singles and doubles sweepstakes of the A. & P. League tonight at 8 o'clock at the Silver Spring alleys.

As in the past event will be a hadicap affair with M. J. Casey, who is leading the league with a 112 average, giving each entry the total difference between his and their averages.

Earl Stocking, manager of the suburban drives, has set aside the en-second floor of new alleys to the league for the occasion.

The entrance fee will be $1.50 per man and four prizes will be awarded. E. W. Abbott is the defending champion.

Sportsmen's Court Play Starts Tonight

Four junior and as many senior high school quintets will usher in the eighth annual Rockville sportsmanship tourney tonight at the Montgomery High School gymnasium, Rockville. Tonight's card includes semifinal games in the boys division. An all-star girls game is booked tomorrow, in addition to the finals.

Leland Junior High School, of Bethesda, faces Takoma-Silver Spring tonight in the first game of the program at 6:30 o'clock, with the Poolesville and Montgomery Junior High School teams meeting an hour later. At 8:30 o'clock Georgetown Prep plays Gaithersburgh. Montgomery and Sherwood will meet in the evening's finals.

John Stone Ready To Sign Contract

Orlando, Fla., March 4.—The Washington club salary holdout worries were at an end tonight when Outfielder Johnny Stone put in his appearance at the camp here. Stone, the only unsigned member of the team, was advised by Club Owner Griffith not to report unless he was prepared to accept the $7,500 wage offered him. Griffith has not yet called Stone into conference, but the outfielder's presence here indicates that he will be promptly signed tomorrow morning.

Johnson, Jr., Sparkles on Mound

By the Associated Press.

FORT MYERS, Fla., March 4. The pitching debut of Walter Johnson, jr., featured today's training camp session of the Philadelphia Athletics.

The son of baseball's former strike-out artist pitched two innings in an intrasquad game and yielded only a single, that by the first man to face him. This, with his own wild throw, put him in a jam, but a double play prevented any scoring.

In his second inning he retired the side in order, tossing some of the season's first curves.

Connie Mack, manager of the club, said today he was "misunderstood" several months ago when he was quoted as saying "the Athletics wanted no publicity." He said that he "was referring to another matter" at the time.

Biography ran back to his recent good third, his only previous start at the meeting. The 5-year-old gelded son of Legatee covered the 1-mile distance in 1:36 2-5 under 113 pounds.

Ties Second.

Johnny Longden, who now appears destined to win local riding honors with Don Meade drawing a suspension today, was trying for his thirtieth success of the meeting, which would tie him with Meade. The Canadian lad was astride Wacoche and sent that fellow into a length lead. Coucci had Biography going easily in second place and waiting to strike. The "Bronx Express" clucked to the favorite around the last bend, and Biography bounded past Wacoche to assume a commanding lead. He increased his margin in the run home. Higher Cloud closed well to threaten for the place.

Lady Higloss had the foot of the field in the 1 mile of the sixth race. The Ladkin mare was doing her best to stave off the stretch bid of the two-time winner, Ward-in-Chancery, a half length separating the pair at the wire. Lolschen was third, three lengths away. Nick Wall swung Lady Highloss into almost instant command and did a nice job of holding his mount together in the stretch drive to pay $9.50.

Hialeah Race Track, March 4.

Dear Al:

Looks as if I can stop jockeys as well as horses. Yesterday I gave Don Meade a little praise for a return to form and today the stewards came through with a ruling that may find Mr. Meade on the sidelines for life. From the official announcement of Meade's suspension, I take it that the rider has been working much after the fashion of the colored fellow in the World War, who, explaining his many wounds, said, "I zigged when I should have zagged and zagged when I should have zigged." It seems that Meade has been mixing his good riding in the right spots for Meade. The fact that the ruling came in Florida where Col. E. R. Bradley holds a strong hand doesn't fit in with the turf conversation that gave Meade a "charmed life," due to the fact that he is under contract to the famous Kentuckian. However, it does give an army of turf followers a chance to say, "I told you so." Whether or not the details of Meade's suspension will be made public, I do not know, but they would make interesting reading.

Three winners today for the firm.

BILL.

First race—Phildia comes off a powerful effort and should earn another set of brackets in this company despite the 118-pound assignment. General A. draws Arcaro for the riding and should be a keen factor. Balanced Budget has a fighting chance.

Second race—Jackie D. gets that outside post position for which I have been waiting and I shall string along. Would be in excellent hands if Litzenberger draws the mount. Buttermilk and Making Time to complete the money circle.

Third race—Jack Snipe, a bang-up second last out, gets in this with 100 pounds and should take down the purse. Regula Baddun, a fairly consistent fellow, will have something to say about the purse distribution. Fake's last indicates excellent form.

Fourth race—Airforce gets the call over the maidens in this field. Carries only steadying weight and has good races to recommend him. The entry of Bubblette and Bitsy-Witsy must be given consideration. Pageantry is a possible surprise.

Fifth race — Lancewood, Trebor and Sachem are a close fit in this mile test. I prefer them in the order named. They are assigned equal weights at 107 pounds. Lancewood was second to Dnieper last week.

Sixth race—Nightcap seems to have a slight edge on this field. I'm depending upon Jockey Stout for a good ride. Bootless, the Bradleyite, is fit and has a speed figure that puts him close to the top fellow. Play Chance to show.

Seventh race — Crowned Head draws top weight of 117 pounds here but is too honest to be placed other than on top of this group. First Pigeon and Seawick to take care of the others.

Eighth race — Move Faster, at home on the turf course, may lead all the way in the final. Jubilargo appears to be the one to beat. I could go for Mixed Party here but not with Stafford in the saddle.

Best bet—Jackie D.

Cox to Wrestle O'Mahony Tonight

By George Considine.

A ONE-ACT tragedy entitled "The Awful Letdown," starring Dashing Danno O'Mahony and Kansas City Joe Cox, will be presented tonight at the Turner Arena. The offering is to be disguised as the feature match of the weekly wrestling show.

When the bout was promoted by Daddy Joe Turner last Saturday, it was supposed to be hot stuff, as the boys used to say over in Swampoodle. Danno at that time was the world champeen and Cox was an ambitious youngster, who had earned his "title shot" by knocking off several important matmen.

Today the situation is the same except for one teentsy weentsy detail. But that detail—the fact that Danno was careless last Monday night and lost his title to one Dick Shikat—knocks the stuffings out of an otherwise significant scrap.

Violent Explosion.

But getting back to "The Awful Letdown." Of course, a rassle buildup always culminates in a violent explosion of the buildee, who never fails to have his wrath subdued by the champ. But when the explosion occurs before the fuse is lit, that's news.

For months Cox had been looking forward to this O'Mahony match. It meant the realization of an ideal. Even though he knew his chances of winning were ever so slight, he craved the notoriety that a title match would inevitably bring.

Dashing Danno won't be the only former champion at the arena tonight because Dynamite Gus Sonnenberg, the old Dartmouth flying tackler, has been chartered to grunt semifinally with Rusty Westcoatt, who used to swim a bit for the University of Honolulu.

In the prelims, the first of which will start at 8:30 o'clock, Vic (Handsome Harry) Christy encounters Scotty McDougall and Joe Campbell huffs and puffs with Jim Coffield.

New High Level For Recovery Due ThisMonth

Weather Improvement Is Expected to Free Deferred Demand.

New York, March 4.—The ruling factor in general business activity last month was the weather and the same factor will probably have as great an effect in March, although in the opposite direction, according to the monthly summary of business statistics published today by the Standard Statistics Co. February manufacturing volumes, retail trade and the general movement of commodities and merchandise were hampered for the first three weeks of the month by an unusually prolonged cold spell and by continued heavy snow over a large portion of the country. The effect of this was apparent in many different lines of industry and the coming of better weather this month and the release of the deferred demand which accumulated in February will undoubtedly have a beneficent effect on current business indexes.

March Outlook.

Present indications are that industrial production in March will record a somewhat greater than seasonal increase. Given reasonably favorable weather conditions during the month, it is possible that the Standard Statistics Co. index of industrial production (1926 equals 100) will reach a new high for the recovery period. The peak thus far was established in December, when the index was 82.0, which was followed by declines in January and February to 81.3 and 78.7.

The index average for the first quarter, therefore, will proably be about 80, against 79.5 for the preceding three months, and 73.2 for the first quarter of last year. Thus, if present estimates of March activity prove to be substantially correct, industrial production during the current three-month period will be some 10 per cent above the like 1935 period, and slightly above the relatively satisfactory results of the final three months of last year.

Reserve Bank to Buy New Canadian Silver

The Treasury yesterday centralized its purchases of Canadian silver by authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of New York to purchase through the Bank of Canada newly mined metal "in amounts specified by the Treasury."

Treasury officials said the arrangement had no particular significance. It was designed to create a specific arrangement for the purchase of silver which is known to be newly mined.

A similar arrangement is in effect between this country and Mexico, whereby the New York Reserve Bank carries out transactions with the Bank of Mexico.

Effect of Tax On Earnings And Dividends

New Proposal, if Enacted, May Lead to Larger Distributions.

Adoption of the proposal to repeal present Federal corporation, capital stock and excess profits taxes, and to enact a law providing for a tax averaging 33 1-3 per cent on the yearly amount of undistributed corporate earnings, may mean larger distributions from earnings to avoid payment of the new tax by the corporations.

This would delete from income statements of corporations the item, variously worded, covering provisions for Federal taxes. Not all such statements currenlty segregate the amounts set aside for Federal payments; many corporations consolidate the amounts provided for Federal and State taxation; some include foreign government taxes. Chrysler Corporation being an example.

The following record, compiled by the Wall Street Journal, gives for a group of corporations the common share earnings for 1935, the amount that would have been shown on each common share had no Federal corporation tax been in effect, and the amount paid per share in common dividends last year:

Square D Dividends.

Gen. Otto H. Falk, of Milwaukee, and Fred B. Lewis, of Los Angeles, were elected directors of the Square D Co., which has a local office at 907 Fifteenth street northwest. Gen. Falk is chairman of the board of directors of Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., and Lewis is vice president and general manager of the Southern California Edison Co.

The directors declared a dividend of 55 cents per share on the class A preferred stock and 25 cents per share and 10 cents extra per share on the class B common. Both the class A and the class B dividends are payable on March 31, to stockholders of record March 20.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Weaken in Last Hour Under Profit Taking After Advance in Early Trading.

New York, March 4.—Stock traders suffered a little from indigestion, following the enthusiastic gorging yesterday on news that corporation taxes might be discontinued and that corporations might be forced to pay higher dividends under penalty of surplus taxes. For one thing, the market was not so cocksure that the new taxes would be passed in the form in which the President proposed them, and for another more attention was given to their drawbacks. After moving up moderately the market fell under profit taking in the last hour and closed irregularly lower. Turnover fell short of 3,000,000 shares. May wheat lost an eighth of a cent at, 100⅜ cents a bushel.

In stocks the trading veered toward liquids. Oil shares were especially favored. Chemicals and liquors were strong in spots. Allied Chemical bounced up another 9 points. Standard of Jersey reached a new high price. Seaboard and Pure Oil were active. Motor shares were strong at times, but they suffered a little from profit taking. General Motors and Chrysler made new tops and held out against profit taking fairly well. Railroad shares failed to accomplish much, but lower-grade rail bonds improved. Railroad freight-car loadings for last week, as indicated by leading carrier reports, rose strongly above the corresponding week of a year ago and the preceding week. A spurt in utilities marked the last few minutes of trading.

Redistributing Wealth.

Just what corporation taxes will have to be faced will be a matter of conjecture for the next several weeks, but the message of the President clearly shows the drift of things at Washington. If the corporation surplus tax is levied as suggested, the long-run effect will be just another form of special taxation, the burden carried by one class for the sole benefit of another. Those who have their money invested in stocks, in other words, will have to dig up the half a billion year dole which the new farm plan provides as a permanent distribution to farmers.

Redistribution of wealth apparently will take place also in a more indirect way under the new tax proposals. Presumably the surplus tax will not be levied against surplus already accumulated, although that also may be done and a surplus tax already is in effect, but has not yet been applied to any extent. It merely stands as a club which the Administration can hold over the heads of corporation executives if it so desires.

Business Handicap.

If corporations be compelled from now on to pay out virtually all their earnings in dividends, they will be unable to lay up funds for expansion and improvements so necessary to the proper conduct of a business. Nearly all the book surplus now shown by corporations is physical property acquired with surplus earnings. In and out of Congress many seem to think that a corporate surplus is ready cash, which it seldom is; but enough education on that line may take place before a bill is passed to prevent such a thing as a heavy confiscation of property built up from past profits.

If corporations are crippled by a tax which keeps them short of cash, a big handicap to business recovery will have been found. Not only will it be made more difficult for them to make improvements and to expand, but when they do employ additional capital on their properties, they will be, in large measure, obliged to borrow it. That will be a tendency for industrial corporation debt to increase, with the inevitable result that bankruptcies will rise in poor times. Wiping out investment savings by the receivership route has long been more common among the railroads than among large industrial enterprises, the latter having largely depended upon share capital.

Large corporations could manage by loans, but to prevent the thousands of small corporations from retaining earnings for expansion purposes will be to stifle their business, for great numbers of them won't be able to borrow long-term capital.

Guessing in the Dark.

That will not be the only disadvantage to a tax that will force industry to borrow money. Money costs money, and some one will have to pay for it. The consumer in the end will be presented the bill. If it is going to cost more to produce goods, either the consumer will have to pay higher prices or the goods will not be produced. To that extent a surplus tax will tend to become a general consumption tax, as were the old processing taxes.

Strictly on the tax side, some logic can be found for the elimination of the corporation earnings tax and the placing of that tax on dividends received by the individual, but actually what is going to happen is that the individual (if he be a stockholder) is going to see the tax considerably increased on each dollar earned by his corporation, and all for the benefit of a vociferous heavily voting agrarian population. The farmer, in other words, is going to make the city slicker pay.

If farm doles are to be obtained from an income tax, some might feel that the tax ought to be levied against all incomes. In any event, it is difficult to follow the President's thought when he suggests that a surplus tax be fixed "to yield approximately the same revenue as would be yielded if corporate profits were distributed and taxed in the hands of stockholders." Perhaps the President knows just what stock each income taxpayer holds and what are or would be the tax brackets of each taxpaying stockholder.

Clever Politics.

All things considered, the new tax proposal looks extremely like a clever piece of political buncombe. No one knows what the yield will be, and before the facts can be determined through the Treasury's revenue returns we will be well "on our way." American Telephone, for example, is held by nearly 700,000 stockhoders, the average holding being 28 shares. That means a total income from dividends on the stock to the average holder of $252 a year. If the holder had much property or income, he probably would hold more of the stock, so that it is fair to presume he won't pay any taxes under the new scheme. In other words, Telephone earnings will largely escape the levy, except in so far as wealthy stockholders are concerned.

While the yield under such a scheme quite likely would be far too little to cover the farm dole, the plan has the appearance of sound finance, in that it provides on the surface the wherewithal to meet a specific Government obligation. That is calculated to fool the country into thinking it has a sound administration and to ward off a greenback issue, which would prove to be highly embarrassing to a President on the eve of an election.

General Motors Favorite Stock In Trust List

Am. Gas & Electric Is in Second Place, With Chrysler Third.

New York, March 4.—The persistence of investment preferences through another year of recovery is the outstanding disclosure in the seventh annual survey of investment trust portfolios issued today by Frazier Jelke & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange. Comparatively few changes in popularity of seasoned common stocks are found in the examination of 1935 year-end holdings, despite indications of greater emphasis on diversification.

General Motors is the most widely held stock in the 78 portfolios compared, while American Gas & Electric takes second place for the fourth consecutive year. Chrysler maintains its 1934 position at third, but shares the place with Montgomery Ward, which, with International Nickel, Kennecott, Sears, Roebuck & Co. and International Harvester, gained popularity in the year.

Trust managements, apparently seeking greater possibilities of appreciation or higher yields, showed a tendency toward wider diversification. The analysis shows General Motors held by 57 individual trusts, American Gas & Electric by 43 and Chrysler and Montgomery Ward each by 40. Thirty-nine trusts held International Nickel and Kennecott, 38 had investments in Sears Roebuck, 37 held Standard Oil of New Jersey and 36 were stockholders of Loew's. General Electric, duPont, International Harvester and Union Carbide had equal representation in 35 trusts and 32 concerns held Pennsylvania.

Five-Year Leadership.

Of the 15 most popular stocks in the 1935 year-end lists only two had maintained an unbroken record of leadership for the five years of depression and recovery. General Motors and American Gas & Electric were among the 15 most popular in each year since 1931. Consolidated Gas and American Telephone, which were the two most widely held stocks in 1931, no longer are found among the first 15.

Comparison of portfolios with a year ago indicates a rather definite trend from bank shares and from stocks of companies representative of the drug, merchandising, food and tobacco industries. On the other hand, commitments were increased in metals, electrical industry shares, building concerns, machinery stocks, motor and accessory issues, harvester shares and mail order companies.

Lumber Firm Plans $4,000,000 Pulp Mill

Pittsburgh, March 4 (AP). — The Rust Engineering Co. today received a contract to build a $4,000,000 Kraft pulp and paper mill for the Crossett Lumber Co. at Crossett, Ark.

G. C. Thornburgh, vice president of the engineering firm, said the plant will occupy a 20-acre site and have a capacity of 150 tons of paper and pulp daily.

Pacific Gas Files $90,000,000 Issue

Pacific Gas & Electric Co., of San Francisco, has filed a registration statement under the securities act of 1933 covering $90,000,000 of first and refunding mortgage bonds, series H, 3¾ per cent, due December 1, 1961.

This is the largest corporate issue ever filed for registration under the securities act.

Corporation Earnings.

New York, March 4 (AP).—Standard Brands, Inc., of New York, manufacturers and distributors of food products, reported today consolidated net income of $12,744,963 for 1935. After deducting dividends on the preferred stock there was a balance for the common equal to 97 cents a share. For 1934, consolidated net income was $13,878,022 or $1.06 a share on the common.

American Metal Co., Ltd., and subsidiaries, non-ferrous metals, producers operating in the United States, Cuba and Mexico, today reported 1935 net profit of $801,527, equal to 33 cents a common share, compared with a net loss of $232,485 in 1934.

National Cash Register Co., and subsidiaries, with plants in Dayton, Ohio, and Newark, N. J., reported consolidated net profit for 1935 of $1,520,409, equal to 93 cents a share, compared with $1,115,631, or 68 cents a share, in 1934.

Edward G. Budd Manufacturing Co., maker of steel products used in the automobile and railroad industries, with plants in Philadelphia and Detroit, reported 1935 net profit of $743,752, equal to 31 cents a share. This compares with a net loss of $1,398,833 in 1934.

American Ice Co., and subsidiaries, operating in the East, reported 1935 net profit of $30,108, equal to 21 cents a share on the 6 per cent preferred stock compared with $453,779, or $3.25 a share on the preferred in 1934.

Great Northern Rights.

New York, March 4 (AP).—Great Northern Railroad Co. today announced that stockholders of record March 16 would be privileged to subscribe to the new general mortgage 4 per cent bonds at the rate of $40 principal amount of the bond for each share of stock, payment to be made either in cash or in the company's general mortgage 7s which mature July 1, 1936.

Possible Disaster, Says Ayres on Tax

Cleveland, March 4 (AP).—Col. Leonard P. Ayres, banker and economist, said today that President Roosevelt's tax plan, as submitted to Congress yesterday "may be a national disaster." He diagnosed the plan's probable effects thus:

Boomerang effects would ride its trail. Dividends, instead of flowing in endless stream, would probably be shockingly decreased.

In place of enhancement, there would be a serious impairment in the value of equities. Bear markets in stocks would ensue.

Corporations would not stampede themselves along the dividend rout — rather, they would probably pay the surplus tax. The stockholder would be out on the end of the limb.

May Wheat Firm; Other Months Off

Chicago, March 4 (AP).—Big Canadian export sales upward of 3,000,000 bushels the last 48 hours, put firmness into May wheat prices today, whereas July and September declined. Predictions of showers tonight or tomorrow likely to benefit domestic crops had a bearish effect on July and September.

Wheat in Chicago closed nervous at the same as yesterday's finish to ¾ lower; May $1.00⅜-½; July, 89⅜-½; corn, ⅛-¼ up; May, 61⅛; oats unchanged to ¼ off, and provisions varying from 5 cents decline to 10 cents gain.

Steel Plants Plan to Revise Selling System

Weakness of Sheet and Strip Prices Prompts Radical Change.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 4.—Iron Age, in its weekly summary released today, declared: "Recent weakness of finished steel prices, notably quotations on sheets and strip, has prompted certain large producers to consider plans for the wide application of quantity differentials which would change radically the entire system of selling steel.

"Definite details of a plan will probably be announced by a leading company when sellers' books are formally opened for second-quarter business, and it is understood that large buyers will be given deductions from base prices commensurate with the economic advantages to mills of the orders which they are able to place.

Output at 56 Per Cent.

"As mills are unwilling to take orders for delivery during the second quarter, except at the current official delivery price levels, until the contemplated new and extras are announced, this week's quotation on sheets and strip steel are largely nominal and subject to shading of $3 a ton. The Iron Age composite price of finished steel, therefore, is unchanged at 2.109 cents a pound."

Steel ingot production was estimated one point higher this week at 56 per cent of capacity, and the scrap composite price was unchanged at $14.75 a gross ton on the basis of last week's figure, which was revised upward to $14.75 from $14.67. The pig iron composite also was maintained at $18.84 a ton.

A NET gain of 122 employes is noted in the Civil Service report on condition of apportionment February 29. Gains, totaling 188, were divided as follows: By appointment, 182; by reinstatement, 1; by transfer, 5. Losses, totaling 66, were by separation, 50, and by transfer, 16.

BAKER.

The number of employes occupying apportioned positions who are excluded from the apportionment figures under section 2, rule 7, and the Attorney General's opinion of August 25, 1934, total 8,804.

Female of the Species.

Now, SMB, you're quite a wit
With your intriguing verse.
But to us girls you make no hit;
We've bought for you a hearse!

For should they take leap year away
From this repining lass,
You'd better make amends and pray
Before we give you gas.

They've given woman equal rights
Except Rule Two-One-Three.
So you'll find out how she fights
If you don't let leap year be!

HENRIETTA KOCHENOUR (P),
Bureau of Reclamation.

Treasury's Accounts and Deposits Bowling League will hold a "Dance of the Thirteenth" March 13, at the Shoreham Hotel.

Collects Meteorites for Museum.

Four meteorits, three complete and one fragmentary, and a large number of mineral specimens, some of which represent materials new to science, have been brought back to the Smithsonian Institution from Chile by Mark C. Bandy, who collected them under the joint auspices of the institution and Harvard University.

To Head Division.

Roy M. Green, of Missouri, has been appointed to head the division of agricultural finance in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. This division compiles and analyzes data on agricultural credits, farm taxation and farm insurance.

For the past year Green has been in charge of the grain section of the co-operative division of the Farm Credit Administration. In 1934 he was vice president of the Production Credit Corporation at Wichita, Kans.

Green was born and raised on a farm near Carrollton, Mo.; was educated in the public schools of that State, and was graduated in agriculture from the University of Missouri. In 1914 he joined the Extension Service of the Department of Agriculture and did demonstration work in Chemung County, N. Y. Later he returned to Missouri for similar work. He has also been associated with the Missouri agricultural experiment station and and with the Kansas State Agricultural College.

Statistical Board Functions.

Q. What are the functions of the newly created Central Statistical Board?—Grace L. Baker (C).

A. This board, established by Executive order of July 27, 1933, and continued by Executive order of June 15, 1935, plans and promotes the improvement, development and co-ordination of Federal and other public and private statistical services. It is also charged with promoting economy and efficiency and with the elimination of unnecessary duplication in such services. An act (Public, No. 219, Seventy-fourth Congress) to provide for statutory organization of the board for a period of five years, was approved July 26, 1936. This act summarizes the duties of the board in more detail. The board is made up of a chairman and not to exceed 13 additional members. Stuart A. Rice is not acting chairman.

On the Air Today

TWO of Paul Whiteman's trusty right arms were in town yesterday to hear the best available talent for a guest spot on Whiteman's Thursday night program, March 12. Whiteman's talent search is not to be confused with an amateur competition. Quite to the contrary, Burt McMurtie and Stella Kahn were interested only in seasoned, or at best professional, artists.

They heard Henry Nestor, Ray Beck, Helen Ault, Louis Brown, Grace Shannon, Lansing Hatfield and Grace Vitality. It was rumored unofficially that the two talent scouts were impressed no end with Washington's talent as reflected in this line-up, considering those heard far superior to groups auditioned in larger cities.

Nestor and youthful Grace Vitality hardly can be termed professional performers, although Nestor has made numberless appearances as the "singing cop." Little Grace, despite the fact she never sang with instrumental accompaniment in her life until WJSV began bringing her out a few weeks ago, gave an excellent accounting for herself.

The others heard have had varying professional experience. Off the record, it would appear that Hatfield (winner of the Eddy Duchin Nation-wide auditions last year) or Miss Ault, who has had considerable stage experience, will be selected.

* * * *

Whiteman heard the performance at the other end of an audition line in the New York N. B. C. studios. He refused to commit himself until the McMurtrie-Kahn delegation arrived for a huddle late last night. I wouldn't be surprised if Nestor is selected, although, as stated before, Hatfield or Miss Ault seem to hold an edge.

The surprise element of the Whiteman auditions was the singing of Fred Shawn, WRC's assistant manager. I have heard Shawn's ability as an announcer lauded highly around the N. B. C. studios; I know of his successful years on the stage. But never before had I heard him sing. He was not a competitor. Someone at Whiteman's end of the line, who knew he could sing very well, induced him to do one number. I'll bet if enough listeners made requests, he'd sing some evening at WRC.

Features for today:

Freddie Bartholomew: In "Rich Kid," Vallee "Varieties," WRC, at 8. Also Eddie Green, Negro comic; Frank Fay, and Helen Lynd, comedian.

Heckler: Bing Crosby presents Jack Oakie in new capacity in "Music Hall." Other guests will be Alexander Brailowsky, pianist, and Wini Shaw, screen singer.

Earl Browder: Discusses "Communist Position in 1936," WJSV, at 10:45. (Representative Hamilton Fish is to reply Friday night.)

Giovanni Martinelli: Met tenor, soloist with Pittsburgh Symphony, WMAL, at 8. Highlight, introduction to "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Eastman School: For sixth consecutive year on N. B. C. net, WMAL, at 3:15. Today: Phi Mu Alpha Little Symphony.

Secretary Hull: Before Baltimore Young Democrats, WJSV, at 8:30.

It is reported that talks on communism, given in the same frankness and enthusiasm as by other political spellbinders, is one of the most vital issues before the radio broadcasting industry. C. B. S. blows the lid off by presenting the general secretary of the Communist Party in the United States, tonight and a reply by Representatives Fish Friday night. Such interesting questions as "What Is Free Speech?" and "What Is Common Sense in Censorship?" are raised when the delicate subject of "reds" and "communism" enters the broadcast picture. After all, what would you, as a listener, do if you were in charge of broadcasting?

New German 'Zep' Makes First Flight

Friedrichshafen, Germany, March 4 (AP).—Germany's new Zeppelin, the LZ129, made an apparently flawless maiden voyage over Lake Constance today with Dr. Hugo Eckener at her helm.

Shortly after 3 p. m. the huge silver craft slipped her moorings. Her engines started to function a few minutes later as the cigar-like ship set a course toward the lake.

Two and three-quarter hours after she left the hangar the Zeppelin appeared over the home base, maneuvered for 15 minutes and then descended. Today's test was the first of a series of technical inspection tours preliminary to mail and passenger journeys to the United states.

Stem Winding.

New York, March 4.

STOPPED in at Club Richman at 2 a. m. and the thought recurred that West Fifty-sixth street deserves a night club chapter . . . It was out of the once internationally famous Richman Club that Joan Crawford emerged . . . You are familiar with the story of Charleston Dancer Lucille Le Soeur, who became Mrs. Franchot Tone . . . Next door to the Richman was Club Anatol, and out of that spot came Barbara Stanwyck and Mae Clarke . . . It was a glamorous block of pavement in those days, crowded with potential stars . . . The night that the late Willard Mack visited Club Anatol at the request of Billy Lahiff to see Ruby Stevens there should have been alarms sounded . . . She little realized that night that fate had destined her to become Barbara Stanwyck, with Mack as the stardust agency . . . But night club business moved east and downtown and uptown, and left West Fifty-sixth street quite deserted . . . The former Club Anatol, dirty and shuttered, looked glum and down-at-the-heels at 2 a. m. yesterday . . . The Schwartz family still operates the Richman, but in place of the great names who once entertained the snobbery of Manhattan, at a $5 cover charge per capita, a band of effeminates now holds forth, rouged men in evening gowns, their fingertips brightly manicured, their toenails vividly tinted . . . On West Fifty-sixth time marches on, but Pa Time's voice has changed to a girlish treble.

* * * *

Mention of Joan Crawford brings to mind that the boy who was once her beau at University of Missouri, is clicking on the stem now . . . Orville Knapp, the boy, brother of Evalyn Knapp, has one of the crack bands of the country at the Waldorf-Astoria . . . If you are tired of swing music, the blare of brass, the cackle of metal-lunged saxophones, you'll enthuse over this outfit, a symphony of musical understatement . . . The debbies have gone ga-ga over it . . . Add Curios: Sailfish decorating the walls of Reuben's are there by right of conquest . . . Arnold Reuben and Mrs. Alvin Austin, wife of his best friend, caught 'em in Florida . . . Ship models lining the walls are the handiwork of convict labor at Eastern Penitentiary, Philly . . . Pertest wall decorations in town are the sketches at "Eighteen," new spot on West Fifty-second street, riskue but funny . . . Best of all Zito's panel of celebs at Leon and Eddie's.

* * * *

George M. Cohan gets his own distinct audience on a first night . . . The Alvin Theater, night that his new play opened, was peopled by gray-haired women and men . . . There was a sprinkling of the Broadway sophisticates, but they were in the minority . . . Lines of the farce subjected Cohan to the accusation of ptomaine poisoning one of the actresses . . . As a matter of record, Cohan himself played the opening night despite an actual touch of ptomaine poisoning . . . Sentimental note in sepia is struck at Connie's Inn . . . Sixty-five-year-old couple, John son and Dean, revive nostalgic memories with a cakewalk they did 40 years ago at Koster and Bial's and Hammerstein's . . . The old fellow is amazingly spry, his wife amazingly handsome . . . They appeal to youngsters in the audience, but to veteran New Yorkers these two old-timers are a chromo come to life, and their applause is tremendous.

* * * *

Swung through the sepia belt last night with visits to Connie's Inn, the Ubangi Club in Harlem and Dickie Wells' place up there . . . Harlem night club business fell on evil days, the Cotton Club shutting down for the first time in years and throwing 110 people out of work . . . The Ubangi and Dickie Wells' place get all the play now with a minimum of mixing . . . At one place, however, a white girl sat with three Chinamen without visible embarrassment . . . The young Chinese were typical dance hall types, the oil dressing on their hair glinting in the reflected lights.

* * * *

Cavanaugh's, on West twenty-third is one of the older restaurants of the town . . . It has been there now for 70 years, which is a passel of generations . . . Leader Billy Cavanaugh and Charlie Sheridan were lunching there yesterday . . . I sent a menu over to Cavanaugh, underlining one dish on the menu: "Aristocratic Irish Stew" . . . The Tammany leader chuckled: "That's the kind of a district I have," he boasted cheerfully . . . I didn't investigate the aristocratic Irish stew, but I'm going to try it one of these days . . . M. C. A. has signed Abe Lyman . . . Leon Belasco follows him into the Hollywood . . . Ignace Paderewski will be startled to learn that one of the columns killed him in a recent issue, referring to him as "the late Ignace Paderewski" . . . Maybe he died pianissimo.

* * * *

Tip to married men who frequent night clubs: Don't sign your name to the raffle cards issued at clubs . . . Columnists now use that as a gag to get your tag . . . You're welcome . . . Marcus Griffin, brisk New York Enquirer publisher, expects Sir Stork . . . Ditto Sid Hydeman, at Red Book . . . Interesting family, this Griffin clan . . . They come from Wheaton, Ill., home of Red Grange and Shipping Board prexy, Edward Hurley . . . There were 15 in the family, 9 boys . . . The song "Throw Him Down McCloskey" was inspired by Grandpappy Griffin's furious fist fight with McCloskey . . . The grandpaw came by his fistic talent legitimately, for Mike McCool, his cousin, was American bare-knuckle champion . . . I like Bob (Follies) Hope's flippant dismissal of the New York elevator strike: "Doesn't bother me," says Hope, "I get a lift with a Camel."

Culbertson on Bridge

Believe It or Not Hands.

From time to time I receive bridge hands from correspondents all over the world that can only be described as weird (the hands, not the correspondents). Some of them are bidding atrocities. Others, even more incredible, describe the ruthless slaughter of aces and kings. All offer dependable testimony to the unpredictable quirks of the human mind. In saying this I am not falling into the usual error of confusing legitimate criticism with double-dummy analysis. In many cases certain bids or plays may appear, with the 52 cards before one, as frightful "bulls." Actually, they are only slight errors of judgment or technique, perhaps only bad guesses. These more or less normal mistakes are not my present consideration. I refer only to bids or plays that are so bad that it requires an extraordinary imagination to believe that they could have been the brain children of experienced players.

Worst Defense of the Year.

The hand described below wins my ungrudging award of a medal for the worst defense brought to my attention in a long time.

South, dealer.
East-West vulnerable.

The Bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 no trump	Pass	2 no trump	Pass
3 no-trump (final bid)

In explaining how such an impossible contract was reached my correspondent stated that he, South, had announced that he used a light opening no trump bid, but that, evidently, his partner had forgotten this and raised him, whreeupon he had gone to game on the assumption had a much better hand.

The opening lead was the four of clubs. East played the queen and South won with the ace. Four rounds of diamonds followed, ending in the dummy. East discarded a heart and a spade. West a heart. The eight of clubs was next led and East ducked! (This was the first trick stolen.) Now a low heart lead to the dummy produced sensational results: West hopped up with the king and East's ace clattered down. Somewhat belatedly East now played the king of clubs and, by so doing, irrevocably blocked the suit. A fourth round of clubs put West on lead, but with the anemic heart suit of North-South already established for three tricks there was nothing he could do but cash his ace of spades. Defenders, by heroic efforts thus managed to hold themselves to four tricks, instead of the seven that would have accrued from the most elementary sort of play.

Swiss May Quit If League Votes Italian Oil Ban

Members Warned Switzerland Must Preserve Its Neutrality.

By the United Press.

Geneva, March 4.—Switzerland today informally warned members of the Committee of Eighteen that if application of an oil embargo cause Italy to quit the League of Nations, Switzerland might be obliged to follow.

The Committee of Eighteen is studying ways and means of applying oil sanctions against Italy, while the Committee of Thirteen awaits Rome and Addis Ababa replies to its appeal that peace be negotiated within the framework of the League.

Two versions of Switzerland's warning circulated among delegates to the League tonight.

The representative of one continental power told the United Press that Dr. Giuseppe Motta, Swiss foreign minister, earnestly explanied Switzerland's anxiety regarding the proposed oil embargo to members of the Committee of Eighteen after British Foreign Secreatry Anthony Eden announced Monday Great Britain's readiness to proceed with oil sanctions.

According to this source Motta evoked the possibility that Italy will leave the League if an oil embargo is applied. He pointed out that in this eventuality Switzerland would have two powerful neighbors outside the League—Germany and Italy.

Swiss Withdrawal Feared.

In such circumstances, Motta argued, the League might assume the appearance of a coalition against these powers and "a great popular movement might start in Switzerland for Swiss withdrawal from the League to safeguard Switzerland's traditional neutrality."

Motta's solemn warning apparently impressed delegates who realized such a popular movement might culminate in a national "initiative" or referendum to decide whether Switzerland should leave the League.

Another source says Motta stressed the possibility that an oil embargo might provoke war and Switzerland, as a neutral, would be unable to participate in any action causing an armed conflict. Hence another reason for her contemplating resignation from the League.

This source expressed opinion that Motta's warning probably was partly responsible for British agreement to a new delay before applying an oil embargo.

Meanwhile, faced with prospects that Premier Benito Mussolini will give short shift to the League's appeal for peace with Ethiopia, the Committee of Eighteen met today to grease the machinery for quick application of an oil embargo against Italy.

Its sub-committees and experts were instructed to proceed with preparation of further sanction formulas.

Specifically, the oil experts were told to study means of applying an effective oil embargo if peace efforts fail.

Then the committee adjourned until next Tuesday—one day after the Committee of Thirteen is to meet to receive peace offer replies from Il Duce and Emperor Haile Selassie.

In some quarters opinion continues to grow that Mussolini will agree to discuss the peace offer, thus further delaying new sanctions.

The oil experts assured the Committee of Eighteen that they will expedite preparation of their proposals in order to be ready for the important March 11 meeting.

Recommendations will apply not only to the export of oil to Italy but also to its transportation by nonproducing countries.

Consideration will be given to the fact that the United States is not a member of the League and may not be able to restrict its oil exports.

Belief grows that even if Mussolini agrees to discuss peace overtures he will not consent to suspension of hostilities pending conclusion of a treaty.

The committee of oil experts will reconvene Friday to survey studies to be made by individual experts in the interim.

Flandin Appeals to Duce.

Paris, March 4 (AP).—Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin has appealed to Premier Mussolini to accept quickly League of Nations peace negotiations, a well-informed source said tonight.

Flandin instructed the French Ambassador to Rome to tell Il Duce, this source said, that France would be "unable to intercede for Italy again at Geneva without seriously compromising her political situation in Europe."

Flandin, it was added, was alarmed at reports from Rome that Mussolini was planning to agree to negotiations only if the war is allowed to continue until the negotiations are completed.

Starhemberg at Rome.

Rome, March 4 (AP).—Prnice Ernst von Starhemberg, vice chancellor of Fascist Austria, arrived today for talks with Italy's Fascist officials preliminary to a tripower conference, Hungary included, here a fortnight hence.

Von Starhemberg was greeted by Fulvio Suvich, undersecretary for foreign affairs, and Baron Pompeo Aloisi, delegate to the League of Nations. In Austrian circles, it was said one of the motives of his visit was to explain results of his recent contacts in London and Paris following the funeral of King George.

While Fascist officials studied an answer to the League of Nations plea for peace in Africa, it was disclosed today that the kingdom's war expenses have climbed into billions of lire.

The government took complete charge of the nation's finances through a decree yesterday transforming larger banks into semi-state institutions.

The only figures made public on war expenses are those published in the official gazette under the section for appropriations. These disclosed that since the beginning of the fiscal year, 6,700,000,000 lire (about $536,000,000) have been spent on the conflict.

'Fight It Out,' Strikers' Threat

tures to 1,472 by police count. Police said 8,568 workers were out.

8. Scores of additional building owners broke away from their organizations and signed independent agreements.

9. Strike headquarters announced that Local No. 16 of the Waiters Union stood ready to call 5,000 members out of hotel dining rooms in a sympathetic walkout.

850,000 May Be Out.

"The union movement is behind me 100 per cent and to the extent of 850,000 persons," Bambrick declared.

The Building Service Workers Union struck suddenly Sunday in a demand for a blanket wage increase of $2 a week, fewer working hours and closed shop agreements.

Representatives of a majority of the buildings affected by the strike voted at a three-hour meeting of the realty advisory board to grant no concessions.

Informed of the board's action, Bambrick said:

"They say they won't budge? Well, you can say 'same here.'"

Bambrick threatened to "shoot the works" unless a quick settlement is reached.

"If the real estate board continues to show the same rotten arrogance, I'm going to say 'let's fight it out in the streets.'"

At the request of a militant tenant, F. C. Bellinger, who yesterday donned a trench helmet, declared a shotgun and ran the elevator in his apartment house, District Attorney Dodge sent two detectives in search of Bambrick and Scalise.

Bambrick called Dodge's action a "rank piece of strikebreaking."

Bellinger also urged a grand jury investigation of last night's disorders, in which approximately 5,000 strike sympathizers stormed through Park avenue and Cental Park West, smashing windows and trying to break into apartment houses.

Nation-Wide Support.

Promise of Nation-wide support came from the international union's executive board in Chicago. In a telegram to Scalise, the board said it would "pull out every building service employe in the United States" if necessary.

An indirect victim of the fourth day of the walkout was Carmela Ponselle, the mezzo-soprano, who tripped and fell when she tried to walk down 18 flights of stairs. She suffered a leg injury.

Police ripped into a crowd of strike sympathizers at Madison avenue and Thirty-second street, tearing signs from their backs, breaking up placards and driving them back into a union sub-station.

The police operations bureau, an emergency organization, reported at nightfall that a total of 74 arrests had been made since the strike began.

Bambrick claimed the union had reached agreements with 1,182 buildings, affecting 20,000 workers. Police supported his claim only to the extent of 56 buildings and 300 workers.

Meanwhile, it became known that Bambrick and other union officials were facing a suit by 28 members who seek an accounting of $1,000,000 in union funds. A counter-claim asking $750,000 for slander and libel is due for a preliminary hearing in supreme court Monday.

Charges of Tax Evasion Against Cutter Heard

Chicago, March 4 (AP).—Charges that Arthur W. Cutten, grain speculator, evaded payment of $1,200,000 in income tax on his winnings in the grain pits were heard today by a Federal grand jury. United States District Attorney Michael L. Igoe said the jury listened to "four or five" of a score of witnesses through whose testimony the Government seeks to indict the internationally known trader.

It will be "late this week or the beginning of next" before the jury will act, Igoe predicted.

Woman Is Fined $650 For 'Slur' on Azana

Madrid, March 4 (AP).—The Spanish government imposed a fine of 5,000 pesetas (about $650) today upon Dona Maria Luisa Otalora, the wife of a son of Gen. Milais del Bosch, for an alleged slur upon the new Left premier, Manuel Azana, when she passed him in the street.

"There goes that odious fellow," the defendant was charged with saying.

Freighter Goes Aground Ships Delayed by Fog

Baltimore, March 4 (AP).—One vessel went aground and numerous others were delayed today as dense fog blanketed Chesapeake Bay. The bay freighter Edward F. Farrington, of the Norfolk, Baltimore & Caroline Line, was reported aground near Cove Point, about 100 miles below here.

Ten ocean-going vessels were listed as delayed by the low visimility. Bay passenger boats operated behind schedule.

British Public Studying Costs Of Arms Plan

By the Associated Press.

London, March 4.—The staggering cost of empire defense began to dawn tonight on a public still digesting details of the greatest peacetime armament program ever launched in Great Britain.

Members of Parliament learned that the regular defense requirements for the next fiscal year, irrespective of the special program disclosed in a white paper yesterday, total £155,250,000 (about $775,000,000), which is £31,000,000 more than in 1935.

Experts estimated that the cost of the first year of defense expansion will shove the figure well above £200,000,000, or, roughly, one-fourth of the estimated total budget of £800,000,000.

Regular naval estimates were sharply increased today. This total, which does not include additional costs outlined in yesterday's white paper, is £69,630,000 (roughly, $348,150,000), or nearly £9,880,000 higher than the estimates for 1935.

Army estimates to be published tomorrow and those for the air force on Friday will be correspondingly higher.

The cost of launching the new program, which the government said it would be premature to estimate, will be disclosed later in supplementary estimates. The government, however, has warned the public that the cost will be heavy.

In some diplomatic circles belief was expressed that now that Great Britain has spoken with a loud voice, there will be less "saber rattling" in Europe and that uneasiness over the Rhineland may subside.

Anthony Eden, foreign secretary, who will return from Geneva tomorrow after long talks with Foreign Minister Pierre-Etienne Flandin, of France, may find the way paved for promoting better Franco-German understanding, observers felt.

Delegates to the four-power naval conference are trying to hasten conclusion of their work and devoted most of the day to framing ways of escape from agreements they are drawing up, should a naval race be launched by nonsigners.

Chinese Rebel Forces Beaten; Americans Safe

6 of 21 Missionaries Flee Area; Others Reported in No Danger.

Hongkong, March 4 (AP).—Defeat of rebel forces in Fukien province in the south was reported today by troops under Gen. Chang Fak Wei as word reached Peiping from the northern province of Shansi that American and Canadian missionaries were believed safe from Communist invaders.

The rebels, estimated at 1,000, were driven back at Wingting, Fukien province, and retreated to Woping, from whefe Gen. Wong Yam Wan's troops drove them farther toward Kiangsi province.

The reports from Fenchow, in Shansi province, told of fighting between provincial troops and Communists near the city.

Myron Burton, a resident of Minneapolis, Minn., said in a letter written March 1 from Taiku that at least 6 of the 21 menaced missionaries had left Fenchow, 60 miles southwest of Taiyuan, the province capital.

Burton wrote that he was accompanied on his flight from the invaded area by Mrs. Walter Judd, of Montclair, N. J., and her two-day-old baby; Mrs. Bertha Brown, of Norwood, Mass., and Mrs. Burton and Miss Bernice Brown, of Northfield, Minn.

Remaining in Fenchow, according to Burton's letter, were: Misses Louise Meebold, Evanston, Ill.; Josie Horn, Lergi, Minn.; McClure Woburn, Minnesota, and Emma Noreen Wadena, Minnesota; Dr. Walter Judd, Montclair; Harold Matthews and Mrs. Matthews, of Marshalltown, Iowa, and Carl Huber, Northfield, Minn.

Creew of Liner Agrees To Eend 3-Day Strike

San Pedro, Calif., March 4 (AP).—The 374 crew members of the Panama-Pacific liner California agreed tonight to abandon the strike that has held the ship nad 441 passengers in port for three days. Indications were the California would sail early tomorrow for New York.

The break in the strike for higher pa came after two labor leaders, Joseph Connor and Barney O'Sullican, exhorted the crew to carry out the original contract, forgetting their demands forPacific Coast wages and carrying on until the finish of the cruise.

G. O. P. Buys 200,000 Anti-New Deal Books

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 4.—Two hundred thousand copies of James P. Warburg's book, "Hell Bent For Election," have been sold to the Republican National Committee, Rusell Doubleday, of the firm of Doubleday, Doran, announced tonight.

The book is a caustic criticism of the New Deal by a former economic advisor to President Roosevelt.

Doubleday announced also that Pierre S. du Pont, one of the leaders of the American Liberty League, had bought 30,000 copies.

Japan Sets Up Court to Try 22 Revolt Leaders

Prince Konoye Declines Premiership; Blames Failing Health.

By the Associated Press.

Tokyo, March 4.—The military side of the liquidation of the Japanese emergency advanced tonight with the establishment of a special tribunal to try for treason 22 officers who participated in last week's coup.

Japan's search, however, for a man to lead her from the emergency caused by the bloody revolt made no progress. Prince Konoye, 42-year-old aristocrat, asked the Emperor to excuse him from the "heavy responsibility" of the premiership on grounds of health.

The prince, who is popular with nearly all elements, had been called to the palace and commanded to form a cabinet to succeed that of Premier Keisuke Okada, decimated by four assassinations during the rebellion.

A portion of the troops which hastened to Tokyo last week to suppress the revolt have returned to their home cantonments.

As Prince Saionji, 82-year-old statesman, faced a resumption tomorrow of the task of presenting Emperor Hirohito with a suitable candidate for the premiership, political gossips bandied half a dozen names.

The most often mentioned were those of Gen. Kazunari Ugaki, Governor General of Korea, and Baron Kiichiro Hiranuma, vice president of the privy council. A few, however, predicted that Prince Konoye would receive a second imperial command to assume the leadership and would accept.

An imperial ordinance, approved by the privy council and cabinet and sanctioned by the Emperor, authorized creation of a special military court to try the rebels. It was designated as the "Tokyo court-martial."

A communique from martial law headquarters said more than 1,400 troops participated in the revolt, which broke out one week ago. Previously the number was placed at about 1,000.

New Orleans, March 4 (AP).—Hilda Phelps Hammond, chairman of the women's committee of Louisiana, announced tonight the committee would start a chain letter tomorrow demanding that Vice President Garner act on their petition charging "fraud" in the election of Senator John H. Overton, of Louisiana, colleague of the late Senator Huey P. Long.
